ALLEN REVEALS NEW CLEW On NURSE'S DEATH

FUGITIVE SLIPPED DOWN RAIN SPOUT

Automobile Then Heard to Drive Rapidly Away, Policeman Says.

GRAND JURY INQUIRY BRINGS HIS PROTEST

Reopening of Inquest Into Mysterious Tragedy Is Suggested.

A trump card, in the form of startling evidence, in what is gaining notoriety as the McPherson mystery, was produced last night by Policeman Robert J. Allen, of the Third Precinct.

Allen said that he has discovered a witness who saw a man creep from the window of the McPherson apartment on the early morning of Friday of two weeks ago on which Mrs. Virginia McPherson died from strangulation in her apartment at the Park Lane.

"This witness," Allen told a Post reporter last night, "saw a man slip out of the window onto a lower roof, and then down a rain pipe. Several minutes later, a car was heard to drive rapidly away. This witness placed no significance on the matter until the McPherson case developed."

Resents Closed Hearing.

"I am able to prove," Allen went on, "that this man was seen to leave the apartment house in this manner several minutes after the groans and screams were heard by the janitor in the apartment house. I can also prove that this janitor awoke three or four persons and asked them about the screams."

Allen explained that he has been in possession of this evidence for three or four days, but that he decided not to reveal it until he was ordered to appear before the grand jury. Allen stated in emphatic terms last night that he resents his angle of the case being thrashed out before the grand jury with Assistant District Attorney Collins in charge.

"How can I be expected to build up a case," Allen demanded, "when a man I know is against me is in charge of the grand jury, when I am not given a chance to interrogate my own witnesses and when the entire proceedings take place behind closed doors without my knowledge of what is transpiring-"

Wants Public Hearing.

"What I want," Allen continued, "is a public hearing, preferably another inquest with the press present and the public as my judges and with my own prosecutor to question my witnesses. Then I can prove what I claim. I can prove that Mrs. McPherson was murdered, strangled to death with a pajama cord."

Allen indicated that he would not reveal all he claims that he knows when he goes before the grand jury, and that he will never substantiate his charge that a man left the McPherson apartment by the window unless he is given a public hearing.

So, having played a trump card, Allen promises that he has a set of aces yet to play—if he is given the chance.

Fenced-In Dormitories Arouse Ire of Coeds

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Sept. 22 (N.Y. W.N.S.).—Coeds at Grinnell College, Grinnell, Iowa, are incensed over what they characterize as an attempt to coerce them to remain in their dormitories after hours. The college has erected iron picket fences fifteen feet high around each fire escape at the dormitories, and a storm has broken because of it.

Now hte girls are threatening to bring the matter to the attention of the city authorities on the ground that the firt escapes create a fire hazard and would endanger their lives if there should be a fire. Some have suggested to male students the use of acetylene torches.

Coolidge Aid Injured In Crash; Friend Dies

Col. Osmun Latrobe Hurt In Nebraska Auto Accident.

Rushville, Nebr., Sept. 21 (A.P.).—Col. Osman Latrobe, Cavalry officer, whom Calvin Coolidge met in the Black Hills of South Dakota in 1927, and brought to the White House as his military aid, was injured here today in an automobile accident.

His injuries were not believed serious, but he was taken to Fort Robinson, Crawford, Nebr., for treatment. A companion, Capt. T. S. Weaver, Wyoming guard officer, was killed.

Col. Latrobe, picturesque soldier of fortune, hunter, crack shot and cavalry commander, crashed into prominence upon his presidential appointment after he had enthralled Coolidge at the latter's invitation with vivid, thrilling tales of his Army experiences.

Vacationing near Rapid City, S. Dak., President Coolidge was viewing the march of the Fourth Cavalry from Fort D. A. Russell, Wyo., to Fort Meade, Nebr., when he first spied Col. Latrobe, a dashing frontier soldier of the old school. The President visited the cavalry's bivouac that night, met Col. Latrobe, became so impressed with the officer's word pictures that he prevailed upon him to take dinner with him the next day.

AEROCADE PLANE LANDS IN JUNGLE

16 CRAFT ARE IN LAREDO

Laredo, Tex., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—One of its number down in Mexico, the Fort Worth "good will aerocade," now comprising sixteen planes, arrived here late today. Cancellation of the last scheduled southern hop of its trip—to Monterey, Mexico, was announced.

A Texas company ship, piloted by Bert Pidcoke and carrying four passengers, two of them prominent Fort Worth men, after bucking a heavy rainstorm from Corpus Christi to Brownsville yesterday was forced down in Sota la Marina, Mexico, 160 miles south of its objective, when the gasoline supply became exhausted. The plane's landing gear was smashed but none of the occupants was injured.

Nineteen Ships Took Off.

The aerocade, which originally numbered 20 planes, had planned to terminate its tour of felicitation in Monterey, returning then to Forth Worth. It will remain here tonight. Only 19 ships got away yesterday morning from Corpus Christi, however, one being detained by motor trouble.

Fifteen of the planes returned to Corpus Christi and took a later start after meeting a downpour of rain. The others pushed onward, three reaching Brownsville without incident. The fourth was the unlucky Texas Co. craft.

Its passengers were Pilot Pidcoke's wife and her sister; Frost Lynn, chairman of service for the Texas Co., and Jack Hott, manager of the Fort Worth Association of Commerce.

Two of the eighteen ships which reached Brownsville turned back early today to seek the lost Pidcoke craft.

Plane to Pick Them Up.

The five persons down in Mexico will be picked up, it was reported, by the Mexican Aviation Co.'s plane operating regularly between Mexico City and Brownsville.

The Texas Co. craft landed in heavy jungles near Soto la Marina and, barring rescue by plane, the stranded passengers would be forced to make their way out of the wilderness by burro. Such a trip would require several days, persons acquainted with the section say.

The first word from the missing ship came in a telegram from Soto la Marina to Burt Hull, president of the Texas Pipe Line Co., at Houston. The message was signed by Jack Hott.

STRENGTH POLLED FOR TARIFF FIGHT

SENATE MEETS EARLIER

(Associated Press.)

Party leaders in the Senate were making last minute polls of their forces yesterday to determine their strength in the imminent clashes over the most important and highly controversial administrative provisions of the pending tariff revision bill.

Starting its third week of debate on the measure today under a program calling for meeting an hour earlier than usual, the Senate will face settlement of the paramount issues touching upon the proposed reorganization of the tariff commission, the flexible clause, and the proposed future transfer from a foreign to a domestic valuation base for assessment of ad valorem duties.

President Hoover in his message to the special session recommended legislation that would permit a reorganization of the Tariff Commission, and said that seven years of experience with the flexible provisions giving the executive power to change customs rates after commission investigations had proved their practicability. No specific reference was made to change in valuation, although the President said some means should be found to enable the commission to speed up its work because of the difficulties experienced in obtaining foreign values.

Democrats Fight Flexible Clause.

Democrats are prepared to contend for repeal of the flexible clause and for restoration to Congress of the power delegated to the President in 1922. They are expected to have the general support of the Republican Independents, who at a meeting yesterday assessed their strength at 14, or sufficient, the latter feel, to give them a balance of power in the controversy.

No indications have come from the Republican regulars as to how they will line up, although generally they are expected to hold out for retention of the clause. The provision could be defeated easily if the Democrats and farm State Republicans maintain a solid-front opposition, but the issue would face another obstacle in conference with the House.

The finance committee Republicans believe they have reduced the opposition considerably by proposing to eliminate a House amendment they previously had approved. The House proposed that in determining rates under the flexible provisions the

SENATE TO AIR WORK SHEARER DID AT GENEVA

Reasons for Employment at $25,000 Salary Being Sought.

WAKEMAN WILL TELL OF HIRING OBSERVER

Committee Will Continue Investigation Today of Shipbuilders.

QUIZ BOARD LEADERS WANT NEW DETAILS

Newspaper Men Will Be Asked to Tell How "Reporter" Acted.

(Associated Press.)

Inquiry into the nature of work done at the unsuccessful Geneva naval limitations conference of 1927 by William B. Shearer, the $25,000 employe of American Shipbuilders, was decided yesterday by the Senate committee investigating the breakup of the arms parley.

Two days of public hearings have developed that three American shipbuilders now engaged in building Government cruisers hired Shearer as "observer and reporter" at Geneva, but the Senate investigators expressed dissatisfaction yesterday over the reasons given by the corporations for this $25,000 expenditure.

The committee is looking to members of the American delegation at the Geneva parley and American newspaper men who reported that conference for additional information as to Shearer's activities. These witnesses probably will be called late in the week and before Shearer, the self-styled naval expert, is asked to explain his work personally.

Case Will be Studied.

Today, however, the Senate investigators will probe further into the history of the employment of Shearer at a secret conference in New York in March, 1927, just before the United States, Great Britain, and Japan conferred at Geneva with a view to restricting the construction of cruisers.

S. W. Wakeman, vice president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, who represented his company at the New York meeting where Shearer was hired, will be the first witness. He will be followed by Homer L. Ferguson, general manager of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Corporation, the second of the three companies which employed Shearer, and Frederick P. Palen, vice president of this company.

Bardo Attended Meeting.

Clinton L. Bardo, president of the New York Shipbuilding Co., a subsidiary of the American Brown Boveri Electric Corporation, told the committee that he, Wakeman, Palen and Henry C. Hunter, counsel of the American Council of American Shipbuilders, attended the New York meeting which employed Shearer after fifteen minutes' discussion.

Senator Allen (Republican), Kansas, a member of the investigating committee, said today he was "still completely mystified as to the need of a $25,000 observer and reporter at the Geneva meeting."

Chairman Shortridge, of the investigating committee, and Senator Robinson (Democrat), Arkansas, voiced similar views and the committee was unanimous that it must turn to the American delegates and newspaper men for some kind of picture of Shearer at Geneva.

Fund Awaits Inquiry.

Meanwhile, the inquiry into the $143,000 "legislative" and "development" fund for use at Washington by the American shipbuilding industry while merchant marine legislation was up in Congress a year ago will await the investigation into the Geneva affair.

The shipbuilders have assigned two reasons for employment of Shearer. Bardo told the committee he wanted Shearer "just to learn the trend of the conference." He said he wasn't interested in the result of the parley, or any reports on guns and armaments. Eugene Grace, president of the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, who disclaimed any knowledge of the employment of Shearer by his vice president, said he understood it was done "in order to get some technical information" about guns and armaments.

Charles M. Schwab, chairman of the board of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, and Mr. Grace both described Shearer's employment to the committee as "unwise."

New York Night Club Razed in Mystery Fire

New York, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Fire of undetermined origin today swept the Cluo Richman, a night club in the heart of the bright lights district.

The flames destroyed furnishings and decorations recently installed at a cost of $100,000, and damaged the building, including several apartments on the upper floors. No one was in the night club when the fire was discovered.

QUICK INVESTIGATION OF CASES PROMISED

Administration Intends to Make Capital Model for Country.

SENATOR TAKES RAP AT EMBASSY LIQUOR

Transportation Is Done in Defiance of U. S. Law, He Declares.

Replying to the declaration of Senator Robert B. Howell (Republican), of Nebraska, that the prohibition law could be enforced in Washington if President Hoover would insist upon it, the White House yesterday placed the matter squarely up to the enforcement officers and asked the senator to lay the specific information he has before the Department of Justice.

In assuring Senator Howell that the matters would be vigorously investigated, the statement declared it is the President's intention not only to secure the fullest enforcement in the District possible under the organization of enforcement agencies, as provided by law, but also to make Washington a model for the country.

While expressing confidence in Senator Howell, the White House statement pointed out that his declaration impugns the good faith and capacity of the enforcement officers, and asserted that they should be given an opportunity to meet the charges.

Full Text of Reply.

The statement in full follows:

"Senator Howell's statement that the prohibition law is not being enforced in the District of Columbia seriously impugns the good faith and capacity of Commissioner Dougherty, in charge of police; Superintendent of Police Pratt, District Attorney Rover and Prohibition Agent William Blandford. The President is glad the senator has raised the question. He is confident that the senator would not make these charges unless they were based upon definite facts with time and place, and if he will lay any such information before the Department of Justice, the President will have the matters vigorously investigated, for it is the intention not only to secure the fullest enforcement in the District possible under the organization of enforcement agencies as provided by law, but to make it a model in the country. Moreover, it is only fair to give to the District officials an opportunity to meet such charges."

"Common Knowledge" Cited.

When informed of the White House statement, Senator Howell declared that since he was not a drinking man, he had no first hand information concerning bootlegging in Washington, but added that he believed it was common knowledge that liquor was being bought and sold in the city. He also reiterated his statement that the prohibition law undoubtedly could be enforced here if there was "a will to do so."

In explaining his contention, the senator pointed out that the President is virtually dictator in the District, since he has both appointive and dismissal powers over all officers, except judges on the bench.

"If I were in complete control in any city," Senator Howell declared, "I would call in my commissioners and police officers when I had reports of gross violations of the law, and tell them that the laws must be enforced or they would suffer the consequences." He again reiterated that an unusual opportunity exists in Washington for the suppression of all crime and lawlessness.

SCIENCE AIDS QUIZ IN HEIRESS' DEATH

OVERALLS ARE MYSTERY

Fairfield, Calif., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—County officials here called on science today to aid in unraveling the death mystery of Miss Edith Irene Wolfskill, eccentric heiress to an $800,000 estate. Miss Wolfskill's body was found last week a few miles from her ranch, at a spot which had been traversed at least 50 times by searching posses since the woman's disappearance was reported July 14.

Three experts arrived here today to study the cause of Miss Wolfskill's death and to analyze circumstances surrounding it. The three are Dr. A. A. Berger, city autopsy surgeon of San Francisco; Dr. A. N. Moody, director of pathology for the San Francisco coroner, and E. O. Heinrich, Berkeley criminologist.

Scientists Retained.

Retention of the three was agreed upon last night by county officials conferring with A. M. Harris, representing the Los Angeles Bank which handles the Wolfskill interests.

Ney and Matt Wolfskill, brothers and joint guardians of Miss Wolfskill, last night joined in charging their sister had been a victim of foul play. Ney Wolfskill, in a prepared statement issued to the public, said: "My sister was kidnaped and murdered." Matt, in an interview given newspaper men, added, "My sister was the victim of foul play. She was murdered." Agreement of the two men was sudden and unexpected. They have been reported estranged for years.

Mysterious Angle.

A mysterious angle was given the case when the body, found in a dry creek bed, was seen to be clothed in a pair of man's overalls. When Miss Wolfskill was reported missing all descriptions said she was clothed in a dress and woman's shoes. Had not this unexplained change of raiment been effective, sheriff's officers intimated today, officials might have been inclined to view the death as an accidental one.

Miss Wolfskill was known to have been an eccentric, and fear of a new caretaker at the ranch, due the day her disapeparance was reported, might have frightened her into running away into the wooded hills. There, unable to care for herself, she might easily have died from exposure and hunger.

Ruth Nichols Finishes Flight Over 46 States

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—The longest solo airplane tour ever made by a woman flier, covering a total of well over 12,000 miles over 92 different cities in 46 States, was completed without a single mishap this morning by Ruth Nichols, one of the best-known airwomen in the country, when she brought her Curtiss Fledgling training biplane to a safe landing on the grounds of the Long Island Aviation Country Club at Hicksville, Long Island.

The tour started from Hicksville March 19 in the interest of aviation country clubs, which sponsored the tour. She was escorted all the way by a Curtiss Robin monoplane, flown by Robb C. Oertell, also a representative of aviation country clubs, and C. O. Bedford, engineer for the Curtiss Aeroplane & Motor Co.

RICH FAMILY'S SCION PLUNGES TO DEATH

TRIED TO BALANCE SELF

New York, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Allen Weir, 26, a brother of Campbell Weir, of Wilmington, Del., who a year ago married Miss Lamont du Pont, was killed early today in a fall from the window of his eighth floor apartment in East Forty-third street. Police said death was accidental.

Weir and two friends, Harry Evans, of New York, and Charles Greening, of Montclair, N. J., spent Saturday evening visiting friends and returned to Weir's apartment about 3 o'clock this morning to spend the night.

Police said Greening and Evans were in the living room of the apartment when Greening, glancing into the bedroom, saw Weir attempting to balance himself on the window ledge. The two men hurried into the bedroom, detectives said, to pull their friend to safety, but arrived only in time to see him topple and fall into the courtyard. They ran to the courtyard and carried the body to the street, where an ambulance surgeon said Weir had died of a fractured skull.

After questioning Evans and Greening, detectives said death was accidental.

Campbell Weir was notified and wired police he would come at once to claim the body.

Police said Weir was graduated from the United States Naval Academy in 1926 and was independently wealthy. He had lived in the apartment for two and one-half years.

Three Are Killed In Plane Crashes

Officer Dies in Take-Off; Boy, Offered Ride by Novice, Victim.

Anderson, Ind., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Charles Folsom, 20 years old, and Seth Baughn, 15, were killed today when an airplane piloted by Folsom went into a tail spin at a height of 200 feet and crashed on a farm 7 miles southwest of here. Baughn was idly examining the plane, it was said when Folsom, an inexperienced flier, offered to give him a ride.

Dayton, Ohio, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Lieut. Mark H Redman, Army Air Corps officer at Fairfield intermediate depot, was killed late today when his airplane motor cut out in taking off.

The plane fell to the ground and caught fire.

Officials at the field said Redman died from a fractured skull suffered in a fall from the plane. They said he fell from the machine before it struck the ground and was demolished.

11 WHITE RUSSIANS DIE IN RED ATTACK

Many Chinese Troops Slain When Soviets Make Counter-Attack.

REPORT OTHER BATTLES

Chita, Siberia, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Eleven White Russian Guards were killed, many wounded, ten horses and a number of rifles were captured in a terrific counterassault by Red army troops against White Russian bands today in the Vomdsov district, 25 miles northeast of Nerchinsk. The Soviet forces had only one wounded.

In the Pabi-Bugutur district, five miles northeastward, Chinese troops unexpectedly attacked Soviet frontier guards with rifles and machine guns, but the assault was successfully repulsed by the Red army.

Similar affrays by Chinese occurred in the vicinity of Michinsky, 60 miles south, and at Amazar, where one Soviet guard was officially listed as having been killed.

Commander Is Dismissed.

Nanking, China, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Gen. Chang Fah Kwei today was dismissed from command of the famous fourth division, known as "The Ironsides," and stationed at Ichang in Western Hupeh Province, "for attempting to utilize his military command to the detriment of public peace and order."

This action was taken in a mandate issued by the state council of the Nationalist government, which stated further that the division was "awaiting Nationalist government orders and meantime accepting the authority of the brigade commanders of the division."

While no further explanation of the dismissal of the general was forthcoming, it was understood that the central government had been informed that he was showing a tendency for independent activities.

Civil War Is Denied.

Shanghai, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Leaders of the Nationalist government today said reports of a fresh outbreak of civil war "in any part of China are groundless."

These denials by officials came as the result of many and conflicting rumors during the past few days alleging that reactionaries had again taken up arms against the central government in Nanking.

Outstanding among these reports was one from Japanese sources stating that the Cantonese Fourth Division, known as "The Ironsides," which in recent months has been

Death of Dogs by Poison Stirs Northwest Section

Several Die and Owners of Others Ask Police to Assist in Apprehending Perpetrator of Mysterious Slaughter of Neighborhood Pets.

Dog owners of Irving street northwest have appealed to police of the Tenth Precinct to put an end to the malicious placing of poisoned meat in alleys and even in the yards of residences, following the death of five dogs Saturday from poisoning.

The complainants are without clews, either as to the identity of the dog poisoner or his motive for such a wholesale murder of neighborhood pets. Several pieces of meat with strychnine were discovered in an alley between Irving street and Columbia road after the dogs had died in convulsions at homes of their owners.

Those who have made formal complaint to the police are Rocco Donattielo, of 628 Irving street; Miss Margarete Helm, 864 Irving street, and Joseph Battaglia, 644 Irving street.

Several puppies, only a few weeks old, were left at the Donattielo residence by the death of the mother. As a result the Donattielo family is trying to keep the canine babies alive by feeding them from a bottle.

Another dog, German police breed, is reported to have been a victim on Columbia road, and two others, the names of whose owners police did not obtain, are said to have been killed in similar manner on Irving street.

The losers of the dogs are indignant at the method the poisoner has used to rid the street of dogs. The former owners contend that their pets disturbed no one and were kept close to their premises.

he asserted, "the conduct of enforcement officers frequently is governed by political considerations. But in Washington, which is governed by Congress and the laws of which are enforced by the President, officials are responsible to the will of the President. Consequently the prohibition laws could be enforced by the Washington officials if the President insisted upon it."

Embassy Liquor Scored.

Although admitting he had no information concerning bootlegging specifically, Senator Howell declared he did have some information on the importation of liquor to the embassies and legations in Washington, in violation of the prohibition act. He pointed out that when consignments of intoxicating liquors arrive at Baltimore, they have not only passed the twelve-mile limit, but also have been actually transported in the United States, while being brought up the Chesapeake Bay. He also pointed out that the consignments also were transported in this country while being brought by truck to Washington.

A trucking company in Baltimore brings these liquor consignments to Washington, he added, because the railroads are too wise to handle them in open violation of the Federal constitution.

"The ships bringing these consignments of liquor into the United States and the trucks bringing the liquor to Washington could and should be seized," the senator declared, adding that "one seizure in each case would end it."

No Immunity at Ports, Claim.

Declaring he had considerable information concerning several consignments to legations and embassies here, Senator Howell said he would gladly give it to the Department of Justice or Treasury Department. He maintained that the legations and embassies have no immunity at any ports in the United States.

Senator Howell referred specifically to the recent importation of consignments of liquor by the Siamese legation as a flagrant violation of the national prohibitory law.

In this instance, the liquor was seized by officers while being brought by truck from Baltimore to Washington, but it subsequently was held by the State Department that under international law all legations and embassies are not subject to national laws, and the members, being accountable only to their own countries, are exempt from the prohibitory provisions of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act.

Was Discussing Narcotics.

The senator pointed out that his statement concerning prohibition enforcement here was made during a discussion of the narcotic traffic in the Senate, and declared it was not an open charge of neglect of duty on the part of any one. He added, however, that he is willing to support his statement and help in any way he can to suppress liquor law violations in Washington.

Maj. Henry G. Pratt, superintendent of police, whom the White House referred to in the statement, in reply to a request for an expression declared, "I have no comment to make at this time."

District Attorney Leo A. Rover also declined to comment on either Senator Howell's charges or the White House statement.

"All I have to say," he declared, "is that my office is doing everything in its power to enforce all the laws."

When informed of the White House statement, Commissioner Dougherty stated, "President Hoover expressed my sentiments."

Sneak-Thief Hoped To Drug Victims

Youth With Chloroform Says He Hadn't Tried Out New Plan.

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Stopped early this morning in Bryant Park by a patrolman whose suspicions had been aroused by the manner in which he was loitering, Samuel Lewis, 18, no home, was found to be carrying a 2-ounce bottle of chloroform which he admitted intending using in relieving subway sleepers of valuables.

The chloroform, Lewis confessed, when questioned by the arresting officer, Patrolman John Fitzgerald, was intended as an improvement in his work. But he had not yet had a chance to use it, he said. Lewis admitted that in the past few weeks he had robbed about 25 men in the subway, all intoxicated.

The youth said his parents were both dead and that he had been without a home four years since leaving his then home at 56 Walnut street, Philadelphia. Arraigned later before Magistrate Louis B. Brodsky, in Jefferson Market court, on a charge of suspicion of having in his possession a sleep-producing drug, Lewis was held in $1,000 bail for hearing Tuesday.

Other contestants were Effie Bowen, 20 years old, of Delanco, N. J.; Phyllis Lenore Young, 18, Lincoln, Ill.; Helen Nicholas, 18, Butler, Pa., and Emmanuel B. Baugh, 22, Evansville, Ind.

COL. LATROBE HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

The friendship ripened and early last year his appointment was announced.

Rumor reported that Latrobe started on his colorful career when he ran away from his Baltimore home to join the Cuban insurrectos and rise to a captaincy in artillery before the Spanish-American War gave him his first taste of soldiering under the Stars and Stripes as an officer of the Fourth United States Volunteer Infantry, a service that won him a medal from the Cuban government, presented to him by Ambassador Orestes Ferrara here in February.

Then he served in the Porto Rican campaign and was recommended for brevet for gallantry in action. He became an officer of the first Porto Rican regiment and in 1916 was back to join Pershing in the Mexican campaign. Risk of his life in saving a soldier from drowing in Chihuahua won him mention in dispatches.

The cavalry claimed him from 1901 until the World War, when he was called upon to organize supply trains. He made two trips to France and after the war resumed his duties with the cavalry in the South and West, finally to achieve a cavalry colonelcy and command of the Fourth Cavalry in 1925.

TWO INCHES CAUSE ARMS CUT PROBLEM

HAND LOADING IS FACTOR

(Associated Press.)

Whittled down, the naval accord problem confronting President Hoover and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald is of just 2-inch dimensions.

What they have to do is to find a formula of cruiser relativity that will permit each government to build to its own needs in 6-inch gun and 8-inch gun ships without jeopardizing the national security of either in the event they ever clashed in war.

In the answer they are seeking is bound up not only vast naval expenditures, but political questions that might strain Anglo-American friendship to the breaking point.

Matter Seems Trifling.

A 2-inch difference in the bore of naval guns seems a trifling matter. Germany, before the World War, stuck to 11-inch main batteries for her battleships, while British and American experts worked up from 12-inch to 13.5-inch, 14-inch, 15-inch and finally 16-inch guns.

German 11-inch weapons gave a good account of themselves in battle against the heavier British calibers. Yet failure to solve a clash of opinion over the seemingly insignificant factor of a 2-inch difference in gun bores threw the three-power naval conference at Geneva on the rocks.

Nowhere else in the whole range of gun calibers, from shoulder rifles of little more than ¼-inch bore to the giant 16-inch naval guns that hurl a ton of steel and explosive 30,000 yards or more, does this vitally significant element of relativity of naval power enter into the picture.

Hand Loading Involved.

And the reason is because a 6-inch gun can be loaded by hand, while an 8-inch projectile is too heavy for that. That 2-inch difference means no merchant craft can carry 8-inch guns without a virtual rebuilding to strengthen decks and install mechanical means of loading her rifles.

Since the World War the United States never has considered construction of any cruiser to carry guns of less than 8-inch bore. That policy offsets Great Britain's potential fleet of converted merchantmen, to be used in war times as swift 6-inch gun commerce raiders.

Great Britain, however, with her trade routes to dominions and colonies that must be kept open to preserve the "tight little isle" and the commonwealth, has felt she must have enough light cruisers with 6-inch guns to police those routes at all times.

Two-to-One Program Provided.

Her programs of cruiser construction have provided two 6-inch gun ships for each 8-inch gunner laid down.

Now, Hoover and MacDonald, each charged first of all with the duty of safeguarding the ultimate security of the nation for which he speaks, are attempting solution of this 2-inch problem on new lines.

They are trying to determine in the light of more than a century of Anglo-American peace and common pledges not to resort to war, what unequal numbers of 8-inch and 6-inch gun ships for each still would spell comparative equality of naval power.

If that can be decided, without sacrifice by either of ultimate naval security, American and British naval rivalries at least can be swept into the past.

Credit Crisis Fear In London Fades

Worst News in Connection With Hatry Failures Already Out.

London, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—It is clear from information available tonight that the worst news in connection with the collapse of companies headed by Clarence C. Hatry has already been published. That there will be no credit or financial crisis as a result of the Hatry failures is evident. Despite serious losses, possibly amounting to $38,880,000, the London market will absorb the shock without any difficulty.

The main problem remaining to be settled is how to deal with the shares of the seven concerns barred from the stock exchange last Saturday.

The more popular newspapers tomorrow proclaim in large type that there is no danger of a panic. In the Times, Telegraph and Morning Post the situation is treated less sensationally. Auditors worked all day over the books of the Hatry concerns.

U. S. Nurse Is Seized In Mexican Slaying

Mexico City, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Eva Martinez de Leon, 36 years old, a graduate nurse of Los Angeles, Calif., was held today following the fatal shooting of Dr. Narciso Cosio Aguilar in a downtown office.

It was charged that the nurse fired six shots from a revolver that killed the doctor. The shooting was said to have followed a lovers' quarrel. Mrs. Serafina de Leon, mother of the nurse, lives in Rivera, a suburb of Los Angeles.

TWO CHIEFS AND GUNS THEY WILL TALK ABOUT

President Hoover and Premier MacDonald look genial enough here as compared to the rather vicious appearance of the 8-inch guns on the U. S. S. Pittsburgh (upper right) and the 6-inchers on the U. S. S. Detroit (lower left). It is the difference between 6-inch and 8-inch guns that has held up the Anglo-American naval accord.

DEPRIEST REVEALS HOW TO GET 'SPOILS'

Chicagoan Tells Club Way in Which Thompson Gave Him Aid.

HEFLIN CLASH PROMISED

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Ways and means of playing politics and getting "your share of the patronage" was the theme of a talk given here last night by Oscar DePriest, Negro representative of Chicago, before the Colored Republican Club.

"Don't take pay as a campaign worker," he said. "If you are paid election day, you can't go to a party council later and claim it still owes you something."

Citing his own experience as an example, he declared:

"I worked two years and spent $15,000 of my money doing preliminary work for Bill Thompson, now our mayor. When I started he asked me how much I needed, and I told him nothing—that when the pie was cut, I would point out my piece. I did."

Paying his respects to Senator Heflin, of Alabama, the Negro representative remarked:

"I saw in a paper the other day that Tom Heflin, the senator from Alabama, said if I showed up in the Senate rest rooms he would throw me out. Well, just for that I'm going over there and see if he's big enough. I'm not looking for trouble, but I'm not going a block out of my way to avoid it."

Catholic Organ Quits Publication in Italy

Rome, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—With the suspension today of the Catholic paper Corriere d'Italia, the Oaservatore Romano becomes the only Catholic paper in Rome, and this, already the papal organ, will become more so on October 15, when its editorial rooms are removed to the Vatican City.

An editorial in the Corriere d'Italia today said that that paper was the victim of conditions which have struck the whole Catholic press, stressing that for 25 years the Corriere d'Italia was the link between the religious apostolate and patriotic propaganda in difficult times.

Perfumery Firm to Lose 1,500 Gallons Alcohol

Baltimore, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Uncle Sam will not return to Joseph Latin 1,500 gallons of denatured alcohol, billed to his perfumery firm, which prohibition agents seized in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad yards here.

Federal Judge Soper yesterday denied a petition for return of the alcohol. Counsel told the court that his client now is manufacturing perfumes on the Pacific Coast. A prohibition inspector directed seizure of the alcohol, said to have been contained in drums labelled toilet water, because Latin's permit to withdraw alcohol from distilleries had been revoked two months previously.

Canned, Whole-Cooked Chickens Put on Sale

Whole-cooked chickens in tin cans are one of the latest dishes to grace the dinner tables throughout the country, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, and offers a new thing in the marketing of poultry products.

The bureau says that the birds are inspected for wholesomeness before cooking by the bureau representatives operating under a Nation-wide inspection service for the quality and condition of dairy and poultry products.

"If the consumer prefers to do his own cooking," says the statement, "he may buy a bird that has been dressed, drawn and hard-chilled at the poultry plant and marketed in individual containers under Government inspection.

"The new method of marketing whole-dressed birds in cans, cooked and ready to serve, will doubtless enlarge the market for poultry, inasmuch as canned poultry can be sold in retail stores everywhere where canned goods are carried."

LINDBERGH LANDS AT PORT OF SPAIN

THRONGS CHEER FLIERS

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Landing here two minutes ahead of his schedule at 4:52 p. m., Col. Charles A. Lindbergh completed the extension of the United States air mail from Miami, Fla., through the West Indies, to the northeast tip of South America.

Tomorrow Lindbergh will take off for Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, blazing the air-mail trail to the eastern coast of the South American continent. He is accompanied by Mrs. Lindbergh and officials of the Pan-American Airways, sponsoring the trip. Two planes are being used.

Swooping down here in the giant amphibian which he took off in at San Juan, Porto Rico, at 6:02 this morning, Lindbergh was received by officials. He will be the overnight guest of Colonial Governor Geir.

Perfect Flying Conditions.

Virtually perfect flying conditions favored the flight, most of which lay over water passages between the far-scattered Leeward and Windward Islands. Three scheduled air-mail stops, at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; St. John, Antigua, and Port Castries, St. Lucia, were made along the way. A courtesy call of 25 minutes was paid to the colonial governor of St. Johns, who happened to be at the Island of St. Kitts, 57 miles from the capital.

On account of the heavy load of mail Lindbergh found waiting for him at San Juan, it was necessary to take a second plane to carry Juan T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways, and his wife, who are making the trip. Lindbergh flew the mail plane and Mrs. Lindbergh rode with him. Both planes carried radio operators. Charles Lorber was Lindbergh's copilot.

Several Stops Made.

Roaring away from San Juan, the flying colonel first touched St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, at 6:52 a. m., leaving at 7:19. St. Kitts, 164 miles away, was reached at 9:19 and the take-off was made at 9:46.

Proceeding from St. Kitts, Lindbergh landed at 10:35 in the protected harbor of St. Johns, where he had some trouble in getting ashore on account of a large number of boats. He spent 1 hour and 9 minutes there, having his plane inspected and refuelling. The journey started again at 11:46 and at 1:30 p. m. the Island of Martinique was passed. Fort Castries, the air mail stop for St. Lucia, was reached at 1:59 and was left at 2:45.

At Port Castries, a large crowd lustily cheered the transatlantic aviator and his bride. Mrs. Lindbergh was showered with flowers.

The Island of Trinidad was sighted at 4:27 and 25 minutes later the landing was made.

FOURTH MAN SEIZED IN KIDNAPING HUNT

Rich Detroit Youth Is Still Missing After Months of Absence.

TRIALS WILL OPEN TODAY

Granite City, Ill., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The body of a man, tentatively identified as that of Jack Wilson, of Detroit, was found lying close to a river dyke near here late yesterday. The man had been shot twice in the head. Police believe he had been "taken for a ride" and his body thrown from the car after he had been killed.

Bass Conley, a cigar store proprietor of Alton, Ill., made the tentative identification. A golf scorecard from a nearby club, found on the dead man's body, bore the names Jack and Bass.

A few days after the kidnapping three men appeared and demanded that the father pay $4,000 for the return of his son.

The elder Cass instructed them to return for the money in a few days and notified the police. When the trio of kidnapers returned they were met by detectives. Joseph Layman, one of the trio, was wounded, and when he sought to escape was later captured. Trial of the three men is scheduled to open in Detroit tomorrow.

Now that Rosenberg, alleged to be the fourth member of the gang, is in custody, it was said a continuance would be asked while he was questioned.

Detectives Nosworthy and Griffin came from Detroit today to take Rosenberg back after he had waived extradition. He made a complete denial of the kidnaping charge, as well as that of being involved in several Chicago drug store robberies.

Police records show he was tried but not convicted on charges of shooting a policeman in Cleveland, Ohio, and that he had been arrested for many store robberies in Michigan.

Plane Stowaway Hurt in Car Crash

Arthur Schreiber Is Near Death After Auto Hits Another.

Newburyport, Mass., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Arthur Schreiber, 22, Portland, Me., boy who flew the Atlantic safely as a stowaway aboard the French plane the Yellow Bird, probably was fatally injured in an automobile accident on the Newburyport turnpike here late today.

Schreiber was taken to a hospital with a fractured skull. Five companions in the car with him, all from Portland, were less seriously injured.

Maurice Drees, the driver, tried, police said, to cut out of line in the heavy traffic. The car, going fast, just missed a head-on collision and then hit a car going in the same direction. It turned over off the road. The car belonged to Morris R. Schreiber, the youth's father.

SINCLAIR ATTACKS CLEMENCY DENIAL

DAY ISSUES PROTEST

(Associated Press.)

Harry F. Sinclair, imprisoned oil magnate, said yesterday that his petition for clemency, which was denied Saturday by President Hoover, had had not been based upon ill health, but upon the claim that he was sentenced for doing something not prohibited by statute or rule of court.

Sinclair's statement was issued from the District of Columbia Jail and was accompanied by one from his business associate, Henry Mason Day, who with him was sentenced for jury shadowing in the Sinclair trial for conspiracy in securing the Teapot Dome oil leases. Day also asserted that jury shadowing had not theretofore been construed as contempt of court.

After stating that his health was "as good as could be expected, under the circumstances," Sinclair said that "observation of a jury only became contempt of court when I engaged in it." He then vigorously attacked the statement of Attorney General Mitchell recommending a denial of commutation, declaring that it could be "summed up to mean that I should remain in jail because I was acquitted of an alleged offense for which he feels I should have been convicted."

Upholds Jury Shadowing.

"I am imprisoned," Sinclair said, "not for having committed any crime defined by law, not for having violated any rule theretofore established by the court, but because I caused a jury that was trying me for an alleged conspiracy against the Government, to be kept under surveillance. For this I was judged in contempt. No member of the jury was approached by operatives in my employ nor were they molested in any way nor were they even conscious that they were being observed and they so testified."

The oil man declared that he had approved the jury shadowing and felt justified in doing so, because "of the knowledge that the same identical practice had been indulged in by the Government so frequently that it had become a common occurrence.

Calls It Usual Practice.

"Affidavits of numerous former employees of the Intelligence Service of the United States," Sinclair said, "including a former chief of that service, were submitted with my application, showing conclusively that the practice of jury surveillance was a usual practice by United States attorneys throughout the country, with the approval of the attorney general and the knowledge of the judges. I purpose to secure the publication of these affidavits."

Sinclair said there had been no sinister purpose in what he had done and that no court had so found.

"The Attorney General," Sinclair said, "states, if he is correctly quoted in the press, that while no corrupt purpose had been consummated, he was convinced that the jury shadowing operations were conducted for the sinister and ulterior purpose of influencing the jury."

Court Found No Sinister Aim.

"If he had read the record, as he said he has," the oil man maintained, "he must know that the trial court which heard all the facts, indulged in no such speculation, for I repeat the court found no sinister purpose in what I did, and the Supreme Court which reviewed the facts found no such purpose."

Day's much shorter statement said that he had petitioned for commutation of sentence because he considered his further incarceration "was not necesary to make a new rule—first established in my case—more binding, and that my past life was proof that I was a decent and useful citizen who had, at every opportunity, served his country well."

Sinclair was first sentenced to three months in jail in May for contempt of the Senate and this term expired in July. In the meantime, however, he had received an additional sentence of six months on the jury shadowing charge, and Day had been ordered to serve four months. It was from these terms that the two sought relief in August.

Will Be Out in November.

Their petitions were submitted to the present prosecuting attorney, the former prosecutor who handled their cases and the trial judges. While the recommendations of these officials were not made public, it was reported that at least two had opposed commutation.

Attorney General Mitchell then recommended to the President that no action be taken, as to do so "would undermine the confidence of the public in the administration of justice."

Sinclair's term will expire November 22, since parts of his two terms ran concurrently, and Day will be freed two weeks earlier.

LAND OF THE SOVIETS OFF FOR CONTINENT

Russian Plane Leaves Attu Island on Its Way to New York.

SHIP IS NEARING U. S.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The Russian plane "Land of the Soviets" left Attu, most westward island of the Aleutian chain in Alaska, for Dutch Harbor this morning, a brief message received at the naval radio station at Bremerton, Wash., said today.

The message gave no details, the naval station reported, and did not report the time at which the plane took off or when it was expected to arrive at Dutch Harbor, a distance of approximately 500 miles.

Weather conditions were not mentioned in the radio message, but the sky was overcast with heavy clouds along the coast in the Pacific Northwestern States.

The monoplane, carrying a crew of four men, is attempting a 12,000-mile flight eastward from Moscow to New York.

The crew of the plane includes S. A. Shestakov, pilot; P. E. Bolotov, second pilot; B. V. Sterlingv, navigator, and D. V. Fufaev, mechanic.

The route followed by the Soviet airmen across the North Pacific has been flown only twice before, by English aviators, one of whom met disaster, and in 1924 by one of the Army world-flight planes, which was forced to turn back before reaching Japan.

From Dutch Harbor the Land of the Soviets was to hop to Seward, thence to Sitka, and from there to Seattle, San Francisco, Chicago and New York.

Built by popular subscriptions from millions of members of the Aviation and Chemical Society, the Soviet plane is driven by two 600-horsepower engines and is of all-metal construction.

Cruising near the Aleutian Islands to aid the plane in an emergency was the Soviet supply ship Krassny Vimpel, or Red Pennant.

Car Kills Youth Unhurt When Yacht Wrecked

Tarrytown, N. Y., Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Arthur S. Allen, jr., of Kelbourne avenue, Philipse Manor, N. Y., who escaped injury when his yacht was wrecked on rocks off the coast of Greenland last July, was struck and fatally injured by an automobile near his home tonight. He was taken to Tarrytown Hospital with a broken back and fractured skull, and died there a few hours later.

Allen, a student of naval architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, made the expedition to the north in his yacht Direction, accompanied by Rockwell Kent, the artist, and Lucian Cary, jr., son of the author. They were shipwrecked off Godthaab, Greenland, and obliged to tramp several days to the nearest settlement.

Man Held in Kidnaping Of Rich Detroit Youth

Chicago, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Seized on suspicion by Chicago detectives and identified by his police record, Abe Rosenberg, alleged Detroit gunman, gangster and kidnaper, will be returned to Detroit in connection with the kidnaping there of David Cass, 22 years old, who disappeared July 25.

No trace has ever been found of Cass, son of a wealthy Detroit real estate operator, police said. Rosenberg is reputed head of the Purple Gang of Detroit extortionists and gunmen, according to officials, and was questioned in connection with the massacre of seven gangsters here on St. Valentine's Day.

INDIANAN IS VICTOR IN AIR CIRCUS RACE

25,000 Watch Kansas City Events; Two Ships Scrape in Air.

STUNTS THRILL CROWDS

Kansas City, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Pat Love, Richmond, Ind., landed at Fairfax airport at 3:24:32 o'clock this afternoon, leading four pilots who completed a circular race through Kansas and Missouri in the opening major event of the international air circus which began here yesterday and is scheduled to continue through next Sunday.

William Ong, Kansas City, was second into the port; F. M. Johnson, of Kansas City, third, and Tex La Grone, of Kansas City, fourth. Three pilots who took off yesterday on a flight that included Topeka, Kans.; St. Joseph, Kirksville, Columbia and Marshall, Mo., dropped out before the end of the first day's itinerary.

A crowd, estimate in excess of 25,000 persons, was at the airport today for the program of short races and stunts.

When officials finished their computations, Love was declared winner of the Class A planes in the race with an elapsed time of 4 hours 26 minutes 14 seconds. Johnson was second, with 5 hours seven minutes and 4 seconds.

In Class B, William Ong was first in 5 hours 29 minutes 47 seconds, and Lecrone was second in 5 hours 44 minutes 22 seconds.

No crashes marred today's program, although two Barling planes narrowly escaped coming together, the wing of one grazing the tail skid of another during maneuvers.

Freddie Lund, captain of the Waco company stunt team from Troy, Ohio, thrilled the crowd with a tailspin climb while 3,000 feet in the air. Lund headed his plane nearly vertically into the sky and spun while he climbed.

Gibson Will Leave For Rest in Italy

U. S. Ambassador to Belgium Feared to Be Victim of Heart Trouble.

Brussels, Belgium, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—United States Ambassador Hugh S. Gibson will leave Wednesday for Italy for a month of rest on the orders of his physician, who thinks the diplomat is suffering from heart trouble as the result of overwork. The ambassador is curtailing all public receptions.

Ambassador Gibson, in addition to his duties at the Belgian court, long has been one of the most important representatives in Europe of Washington in connection with naval matters and disarmament negotiations.

During the past few months he has made several short visits to London to consult with Ambassador Charles G. Dawes, with reference to the latter's negotiations with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, looking toward a naval agreement between Great Britain and the United States. Earlier this year, as he had on previous occasions, he attended the disarmament conference of the League of Nations at Geneva.

Waggoner to Be Taken To New York for Trial

Cheyenne, Wyo., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—C. D. Waggoner, Telluride, Colo., bank president, will leave here at 8:10 a. m. Monday for New York to stand trial on a charge of using the mails in furtherance of his alleged scheme to defraud six New York banks of a half million dollars.

The last legal barrier to his transfer to New York was removed today with the arrival in Cheyenne of the order of removal which had been signed by a Federal judge.

Short Pants and No Socks Fashion's Decree for Men

Long Beach, Calif., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Knee-length pants, sleeves to the elbows, sockless feet and hatless heads, silk for the rich and denim for the poor—these are the styles a fashion center for men dictated here yesterday in the first national men's dress reform parade.

And because the judges believed Edmund G. Guerney, dressmaking teacher of the Long Beach Polytechnic High School, had evolved the sanest solution of a summer ensemble for men that will relieve the oppressed male from heavy, hot clothes and a perspiring brow, $200 was awarded him.

The parade was sponsored by the Long Beach Chapter of Sciots in a serious attempt to impress upon manhood in general and clothnig manufacturers in particular the antiquated state into which mere men's clothing has fallen compared to the flimsy, cool gowns of the modern maiden and mother, so conducive to summer comfort.

Here's what Guerney wore:

A light gray, tan tweed suit of full length trousers and sleeves, bloused at the waist and cut with a V-neck. A shirt of pongee silk, open at the waist and with elbow-length sleeves. The beltless, suspenderless trousers were buttoned to the shirt on the inside. Light shoes and socks completed the outfit. Guerney was without a chapeau.

Forty-nine other contestants, who ran him a close race, displayed knee-length trousers or shorts, half sleeves and sleeveless shirts, bareheads and shoes without stockings. Neckties were taboo throughout. Colors were rampant—pale blue pajamas, red and green checked pajamas, flaming striped pants and brilliant shirts.

Several thousand spectators lined the streets and roared acclaim and approval.

Gov. Roosevelt Cites Incident as One of Few Unjust Results From Baumes Law; Other Felonies Occurred 15 Years Ago, He Relates.

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Abert N. Garstin, 44, former business manager of a Louisville newspaper, who passed a bad check while on a drinking bout, pleaded guilty and was sent to Dannemora Prison for life as a fourth offender, is a free man. Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt today announced executive clemency, and Garstin, who has served two years and four months on the check charge, will try again to stage a "comeback," in which he was successful once for twelve years.

The judge who sentenced Garstin, the district attorney who prosecuted him and many newspaper publishers and friends have sought Garstin's freedom for several months, claiming that his life sentence was an example of the grave injustice which can be done under a mandatory law such as the Baumes act.

Gov. Roosevelt, in announcing his action, commented at length on the case. He said he believed the Garstin case should not be affected by the Baumes statute.

"It was aimed at more serious offenses and more particularly those of force or violence," the governor stated. "While the Baumes laws, as a whole, were absolutely necessary and have served as a salutary deterrent to crime, I believe that in a few isolated cases such as the present one, the result is unjust. The district attorney of New York County writes me that this was one of the cases he brought to the attention of the State Crime Commission in his efforts to induce the commission to introduce a bill modifying the law."

The governor also pointed out that Garstin, "an experienced and able journalist, was serving a life sentence for issuing a check for $300, the other three sentences being for similar offenses, and covering a period of twenty-one years, and that for fifteen years he had led an upright life." In each instance, Garstin was drinking at the time of his offense, the governor remarking, "He seems to owe his present plight apparently to overindulgence in intoxicants."

Garstin was sentenced to prison by Judge Max S. Levine in general sessions in June, 1927, upon the evidence of his former convictions, and thereafter the newspaper man began his fight for re-sentencing, revealing that he had been pardoned during one of his prior prison terms.

MORE LIQUOR LAWS NEEDED, IS CLAIM

W. C. T. U. HEARS TALK

Indianapolis, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Congressional legislation clarifying the relationship of State and Federal governments regarding enforcement is necessary before prohibition can be made effective, Gov. Harry G. Leslie, of Indiana, declared today at ceremonies in connection with the national Women's Christian Temperance Union's fifty-fifth annual convention here.

The governor's statement was made at the unveiling at the Indiana statehouse of a bronze plaque commemorating the election in this city 50 years ago of Miss Frances Elizabeth Willard as president of the W. C. T. U. Gov. Leslie accepted the tablet, made by Lorado Taft, Chicago sculptor, following presentation by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of Brooklyn, N. Y., national W. C. T. U. president.

"Today Indiana is as dry as law can make it under present enforcement conditions," Gov. Leslie declared.

Clarification Needed, Claim.

"She is in the forefront of those States who are cooperating with the Federal Government in the enforcement of the prohibition act. But to make prohibition more effective there must be legislation by Congress to clarify the relationship of the Federal enforcing authorities to the enforcement authorities of the several sovereign States. Enforcement responsibility must be placed.

"The effectiveness of prohibition," he added, "is dependent upon public opinion."

The tablet ceremonies were attended by three members of the temperance union who were present at the election of Miss Willard.

Liquor Given Chance, Claim.

Stanley High, editor of the Christian Herald, in an address prepared for delivery at the night session, said the American people, "in good faith with the liquor business for three-quarters of a century," had given liquor a chance. "But," he added, "they found out about liquor. That is why we have prohibition." He said prohibition would continue as long as folk remember what they learned about the liquor business.

High questioned the purpose of those who want prohibition abolished when he said: "I do not believe the average wet newspaper fights against prohibition because it believes it will gain by winning the fight. Nor do I believe that liquor is so hard to get that the average wet is made wet by his thirst. He can get liquor, only it is very inconvenient and not so good."

They Call It Politics

By CARTER FIELD

THE Canadian government is contemplating a wider range of activity in controlling the illicit liquor traffic.

To clear up uncertainty as to its power it has instructed its delegation to the Imperial Conference of British Dominions which is to convene in London on October 8 to obtain a ruling. This ruling will determine whether the Canadian government has a right to operate beyond its own boundaries, or whether when the 3-mile limit is passed all power is taken over by the British government.

Bearing not only on the ordinary problem of rum running from Canada, across the 3,000-mile border, but also on control of rumrunners along the Atlantic Coast, determination of this question is of more vital interest as a matter of fact in Washington than either in Ottawa or London.

* * * *

FOR example, it is regarded by the Ottawa government at the moment as very questionable whether a Canadian government vessel would have the right to pursue a suspected rumrunner beyond the 3-mile limit along the Canadian coast. Strange as the limitation may appear, it is stated positively that, although the issue has been raised repeatedly in the past, long before the question of rum running came to the fore, the weight of authority and precedents has been against wider power. The Canadians believe that action by the imperial conference is necessary to give the Canadian government authority to extend its vigilance in the waters just off the Dominion's coasts.

Interwined with this question is another involving whether an imperial statute, extending in its operation to the Dominion, will or will not override a Dominion statute if one is in conflict with the other. The Dominion delegation to the imperial conference will make a strong fight for the greater measure of independence for the Dominion as to this. All British shipping, it is pointed out, is controlled by British law. It is a very involved question as to where relative authorities begin and end, and the outcome of the conference on this point will be of great importance to shipping interests.

* * * *

WHILE these two questions are the only outstanding ones this time in which the United States has a vital interest, there is another in which there is tremendous interest both in the dominions generally and in the mother country, and which, incidentally, interests the United States because so frequently in the past Washington has been keenly interested in the interrelations of the British Empire. The last time, it so happens, was the most important of all. That was when Canada, Australia and New Zealand, just prior to the Washington arms conference, insisted on the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

The third question which Canada will put up to the imperial conference relates to the power of imperial veto. Legally, the British Parliament has the right to veto any act of the Canadian Parliament. Actually, this historic right is much like the right of veto of an act of parliament by the British King, or the right of the House of Lords to refuse to approve what has been done by the House of Commons. It has been 50 years since the British Parliament vetoed an act of the Canadian Parliament.

Under the law, however, the governor general of Canada can be restrained from approving any act of the Canadian Parliament, and can insist upon its being sent to London for the "signification of the king's pleasure."

* * * *

THERE is all the more interest in Washington in this situation, which in view of the extremely cordial spirit could scarcely be characterized as a controversy, because it comes on the eve of the arms conference from which an agreement limiting the tonnage of cruisers and extending the holiday in battleship construction is confidently expected.

Timed just a few months before, it follows precisely the chronology of the imperial conference of 1921, which preceded the Washington conference.

But from the rum-running angle it comes on the heels of a new epidemic of firing on Canadian vessels by American rum chasers. The case of the Shawnee, fired on while sailing in ballast from Bermuda to Halifax, was filling the Canadian newspapers just as the delegation prepared to sail for London for the imperial conference.

Incidentally the feeling of Canada toward the United States, if newspaper editorials are to be accepted, has been injured a little in the last few months by the tariff discussion, one of the Western papers in the Dominion having characterized the increased rates on Canadian products as "savage."

Tariff Commission and the President should equalize differences in conditions of competition instead of using the existing differences in costs of production formula. The finance committee tariff framers now would restore the latter measuring rod, which the Democrats favor.

Consideration Long Way Off.

The consideration of the controversial rate schedules appears to be a long way off. When they do come up, the Western Republicans are organized to contest every industrial rate increase. Whether they intend doing this in piecemeal fashion or by motion to recommit with instructions that a bill be reported confined solely to agricultural revision remains to be determined.

Democratic tariff statements continued to appear over the week-end, Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, saying he could not reconcile the policy of President Hoover in remaining silent while the tariff debate rages with the President's "formidable declaration" against the debenture during the pendency of the farm bill.

Referring to the statement of Senator Watson, of Indiana, the Republican leader, that the President had been advised by the former to keep out of the tariff controversy while the bill was in its legislative stages, Caraway inquired if Watson did not give the President his "invaluable advice" during the farm debate in time, "or if the usually considerate President ignored that advice."

Takes Slap at Hoover.

The Arkansas senator said it was difficult to believe that the President, after calling an extraordinary session for a special purpose, should be "so indifferent to the perversion of that purpose as to withhold from the administration spokesmen in charge any idea of what he wants."

He said the flexible provisions had been framed by the House in such a manner as to make the President a "complete dictator" in fixing tariff rates and that the tariff commission under the House bill would have been "absolutely subject to the President's will" because appointments could have been made without regard to party affiliation.

With the decision by the finance committee Republicans to restrict the executive's flexible authority virtually to existing law and to leave the tariff commission bipartisan as at present, Caraway saw a "reluctant abandonment" by the majority of what the President wanted.

He deduced from this that the "president, with his keen sense of the danger that lies in the enactment of so gross and extortionate a tariff, has advised his legislative captains that they must carry the burden."

House Plans Recesses Through October 14

(Associated Press.)

The empty formality of meeting and adjourning twice a week for almost a month lay before the House as it prepared to obey at noon today the mandate of the resolution under which Congress quit work in June for a mid-summer recess.

Forewarned that there would be no business transacted in the House before October 14, most of the members were continuing their vacation until that time and neither Speaker Longworth nor Representative Tilson, of Connecticut, the majority leader, were in the city to preside over the session. One of the few members who have returned will wield the gavel for the brief meeting.

While the date for the House to settle down to work officially has been set for October 14, there is little prospect that it will have anything to do at that time. All of its work has been cleared away until the Senate finishes with the tariff bill and leaders have indicated that the three-day recesses probably will be continued beyond that period.

Rev. Lester Bradner, Episcopal Leader, Dies

Providence, R. I., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The Rev. Lester Bradner, Ph. D., director of religious education for the Diocese of Rhode Island and from 1914 to 1923 director of the department of religious education of the national board of the Protestant Episcopal Church, died last night at his home in this city, of a cardiac ailment. He was 62 years old.

Besides his connection with Episcopal educational work, he was active in interdenominational work. He was born in Chicago. He graduated from Yale University and studied for the ministry at the General Theological Seminary in New York.

NAVY AGAINST U.S. YARDS, BLACK SAYS

New York Representative Asks That Lobby Quiz Be Broadened.

BIG WASTE IS CHARGED

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Charging that the Navy Department has for some years shown antagonism to the navy yards and a corresponding favoritism to private shipyards in the awarding of contracts, Representative Loring M. Black, of New York, demanded otday that the inquiry into the ship building lobby in Washington be extended to a search of the cause for this situation.

If the investigation now being made by the subcommittee of the Senate naval affairs committee does not thoroughly expose this phase of the activities of the private shipbuilding interests, Representative Black said, Congress should respectfully petition President Hoover to appoint a committee of accounts to go over the Navy Department's records of the costs of building cruiser and other naval craft since 1920.

Hits Shipyard Profits.

"For the last six or seven years," he said, "the Navy Department has been rather antagonistic to the navy yards, while private shipyards have been making profits which seem unreasonable. I hope that the Senate subcommittee, in looking into the activities of William B. Shearer at the Geneva conferences and of other naval lobbyists of the ship builders, will not fail to solve the question of why the Navy people should be against thir own navy yards. There is plenty of material on this subject to be had. If this committee doesn't get it President Hoover should be petitioned respectfully by Congress ot appoint a board of accounts to go after it."

Black said he had been considering asking the House appropriations committee to make this inquiry, but that the house was not yet completely organized, while the Senate naval affairs committee could include it in its present investigation.

"It is frequently said that the cost of building ships in navy yards is too high in comparison with the costs in private shipyards. This is mistaken conception, which smacks of the activities of the shipbuilders' lobbyists.

"It is not true that it costs the Government less to build ships in private shipyards than in the navy yards. For example, in 1927, private yards bid $42,430,000 for four cruisers, while two of the navy yards—Puget Sound and Mare Island—bid $30,411,920. Of six contracts awarded at that time, four went to private companies and only two to the navy yards.

Sees Saving to Government.

"Granting that private shipyards are a necessary adjunct of national defense, so are the navy yards. The navy yards should be looked upon as the primary bases.

"For the 1927 construction to which I have referred, the New York Navy Yard did not bid. Assuming that two of the navy yards on the Atlantic Coast could each have built one vessel at the cost estimated by the Western navy yards, the Government would have saved almost $12,000,000.

"Anyone who doubts the activity of the shipbuilding lobby in this direction, should have been in Washington at the last session when the fifteen-cruiser bill was up. When we tacked on the Dallinger amendment providing that every alternate cruiser should be built in a navy yard, a lot of people lost interest in the bill."

MRS. M'CORMICK IN SENATE RACE

Gov. Fred E. Sterling, of Rockford, Ill., who has been campaigning quietly for several weeks, and Attorney General Edward J. Brundage, Cook County leader.

Attorney General Brundage, it is reported, probably will announce his candidacy on a prohibition platform as outlined by the Hoover enforcement committee.

Mrs. McCormick is the first woman in Illinois who has aspired for a seat in the United States Senate. She has long been active in politics and was elected representative-at-large by a plurality of more than 600,000. This demonstration of strength is generally conceded to have brought her prominently to the fore as a senatorial possibility.

(Associated Press.)

Capital political leaders received with interest but without surprise the announcement yesterday by Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, representative from Illinois, that she would oppose Senator Charles S. Deneen for the Republican senatorial nomination next spring.

One of the few women to aspire to the Senate, Mrs. McCormick is seeking the seat held by her late husband, Medill McCormick, in the chamber where her father, Senator Mark Hanna, of Ohio, long a Republican party leader, once served.

As the wife and daughter of these Republican senators, Mrs. McCormick is a familiar figure in Washington, where she has been for the last few months in her own right a member of the House.

Her contest against Senator Deneen had been speculated upon in political circles for some time. It was he who defeated the late Senator McCormick for renomination six years ago. Deneen is now just ending that term. McCormick died shortly before his term expired and shortly after his defeat for renomination.

Informed of Mrs. McCormick's announcement of her candidacy both Deneen and Senator Glenn (Republican), Illinois, reserved comment. There is some interest as to what part, if any, Glenn will take in the forthcoming Republican contest in the State.

If nominated and elected, Mrs. McCormick would be the first woman to win her way to the Senate by a campaign. One other woman has served in the Senate, Mrs. W. H. Felton, of Georgia, who was appointed by the Governor of Georgia in 1922 to fill a vacancy. She served but a few hours before voluntarily retiring.

stationed at Ichang, Hupeh, had shown a tendency to return to Kwangtung Province and possibly join the Kwangsi reactionaries in an attempt to overthrow the present Canton government, which is favorable to Nanking. This division gained its nickname by its brilliant campaign as the spearhead of the Nationalist forces' triumphant advance in 1926 from Canton to Peking, in which it achieved a long list of victories against the northerners, with no defeats.

Officials, however, said the Ironsides had not indicated any such intention but had been ordered north to take up garrison duties along the Lunghai Railway, which runs across Honan Province. "This movement," it was said, "possibly gave rise to the foregoing erroneous reports."

The same officials not only denied reports of civil war but said that "the government's troop disbandment program is proceeding in all areas." Gen. Ho Ying Ching, inspector general of military training, said, "The reorganization of military unity under direct control of Nanking will be completed in a fortnight, while those under the authority of other leaders, such as Feng Yu Hsiang and Yen Hsi Shan (closely associated in governing Shaansi Province in the Northwest and recently reported to have sold allegiance to Nanking), will be completed by January 1, 1930."

Japanese dispatches from Canton today said the Kwangtung government had telegraphed Nanking that Kwangsi radicals were again active and were believed to be planning a fresh campaign against Canton.

Earlier this year they fought their way almost to the gates of that rich commercial city, but were finally driven off with bloody losses.

However, Nanking official circles said, "the southern provinces are quiet," and reliably informed circles here did not believe hostilities had broken out anywhere in China.

These Chinese observers believe the movement is directed not only against President Chiang but also against Minister of Finance T. V. Soong, Minister of Labor and Commerce A. H. Tung and others. The campaign has taken the form of numerous complaints to the central Kuomintang headquarters accusing government officials of "maladministration."

be asserted, "the conduct of enforcement officers frequently is governed by political considerations. But in Washington, which is governed by Congress and the laws of which are enforced by the President, officials are responsible to the will of the President. Consequently the prohibition laws could be enforced by the Washington officials if the President insisted upon it."

Embassy Liquor Scored.

Although admitting he had no information concerning bootlegging specifically, Senator Howell declared he did have some information on the importation of liquor to the embassies and legations in Washington, in violation of the prohibition act. He pointed out that when consignments of intoxicating liquors arrive at Baltimore, they have not only passed the twelve-mile limit, but also have been actually transported in the United States, while being brought up the Chesapeake Bay. He also pointed out that the consignments also were transported in this country while being brought by truck to Washington.

A trucking company in Baltimore brings these liquor consignments to Washington, he added, because the railroads are too wise to handle them in open violation of the Federal constitution.

"The ships bringing these consignments of liquor into the United States and the trucks bringing the liquor to Washington could and should be seized," the senator declared, adding that "one seizure in each case would end it."

No Immunity at Ports, Claim.

Declaring he had considerable information concerning several consignments to legations and embassies here, Senator Howell said he would gladly give it to the Department of Justice or Treasury Department. He maintained that the legations and embassies have no immunity at any ports in the United States.

Senator Howell referred specifically to the recent importation of consignments of liquor by the Siamese legation as a flagrant violation of the national prohibitory law.

In this instance, the liquor was seized by officers while being brought by truck from Baltimore to Washington, but it subsequently was held by the State Department that under international law all legations and embassies are not subject to national laws, and the members, being accountable only to their own countries, are exempt from the prohibitory provisions of the eighteenth amendment and the Volstead act.

Was Discussing Narcotics.

The senator pointed out that his statement concerning prohibition enforcement here was made during a discussion of the narcotic traffic in the Senate, and declared it was not an open charge of neglect of duty on the part of any one. He added, however, that he is willing to support his statement and help in any way he can to suppress liquor law violations in Washington.

Maj. Henry G. Pratt, superintendent of police, whom the White House referred to in the statement, in reply to a request for an expression declared, "I have no comment to make at this time."

District Attorney Leo A. Rover also declined to comment on either Senator Howell's charges or the White House statement.

"All I have to say," he declared, "is that my office is doing everything in its power to enforce all the laws."

Sneak-Thief Hoped To Drug Victims

Youth With Chloroform Says He Hadn't Tried Out New Plan.

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Stopped early this morning in Bryant Park by a patrolman whose suspicions had been aroused by the manner in which he was loitering, Samuel Lewis, 18, no home, was found to be carrying a 2-ounce bottle of chloroform which he admitted intending using in relieving subway sleepers of valuables.

The chloroform, Lewis confessed, when questioned by the arresting officer, Patrolman John Fitzgerald, was intended as an improvement in his work. But he had not yet had a chance to use it, he said. Lewis admitted that in the past few weeks he had robbed about 25 men in the subway, all intoxicated.

The youth said his parents were both dead and that he had been without a home four years since leaving his then home at 56 Walnut street, Philadelphia. Arraigned later before Magistrate Louis B. Brodsky, in Jefferson Market court, on a charge of suspicion of having in his possession a sleep-producing drug, Lewis was held in $1,000 bail for hearing Tuesday.

COL. LATROBE HURT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

The friendship ripened and early last year his appointment was announced.

Rumor reported that Latrobe started on his colorful career when he ran away from his Baltimore home to join the Cuban insurrectos and rise to a captaincy in artillery before the Spanish-American War gave him his first taste of soldiering under the Stars and Stripes as an officer of the Fourth United States Volunteer Infantry, a service that won him a medal from the Cuban government, presented to him by Ambassador Orestes Ferrara here in February.

Then he served in the Porto Rican campaign and was recommended for merit for gallantry in action. He became an officer of the first Porto Rican regiment and in 1916 was back to join Pershing in the Mexican campaign. Risk of his life in saving a soldier from drowing in Chihuahua won him mention in dispatches.

The cavalry claimed him from 1901 until the World War, when he was called upon to organize supply trains. He made two trips to France and after the war resumed his duties with the cavalry in the South and West, finally to achieve a cavalry colonelcy and command of the Fourth Cavalry in 1925.

TWO INCHES CAUSE ARMS CUT PROBLEM

(Associated Press.)

Whittled down, the naval accord problem confronting President Hoover and Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald is of just [illegible] dimensions.

What they have to do is to find a formula of cruiser relativity that will permit each government to build to its own needs in 8-inch gun and 6-inch gun ships without jeopardizing the national security of either in the event they ever clashed in war.

In the answer they are seeking is bound up not only vast naval expenditures, but political questions that might strain Anglo-American friendship to the breaking point.

Matter Seems Trifling.

A 2-inch difference in the bore of naval guns seems a trifling matter. Germany, before the World War, stuck to 11-inch main batteries for her battleships, while British and American experts worked up from 12-inch to 13.5-inch, 14-inch, 15-inch and finally 16-inch guns.

German 11-inch weapons gave a good account of themselves in battle against the heavier British calibers. Yet failure to solve a clash of opinion over the seemingly insignificant factor of a 2-inch difference in gun bores threw the three-power naval conference at Geneva on the rocks.

Nowhere else in the whole range of gun calibers, from shoulder rifles of little more than ¼-inch bore to the giant 16-inch naval guns that hurl a ton of steel and explosive 30,000 yards or more, does this vitally significant element of relativity of naval power enter into the picture.

Hand Loading Involved.

And the reason is because a 6-inch gun can be loaded by hand, while an 8-inch projectile is too heavy for that. That 2-inch difference means no merchant craft can carry 8-inch guns without virtual rebuilding to strengthen decks and install mechanical means of loading her rifles.

Since the World War the United States never has considered construction of any cruiser to carry guns of less than 8-inch bore. That policy offsets Great Britain's potential fleet of converted merchantmen, to be used in war times as swift 6-inch gun commerce raiders.

Great Britain, however, with her trade routes to dominions and colonies that must be kept open to preserve the "tight little isle" and the commonwealth, has felt she must have enough light cruisers with 6-inch guns to police those routes at all times.

Two-to-One Program Provided.

Her programs of cruiser construction have provided two 6-inch gun ships for each 8-inch gunner laid down.

Now, Hoover and MacDonald, each charged first of all with the duty of safeguarding the ultimate security of the nation for which he speaks, are attempting solution of this 2-inch problem on new lines.

They are trying to determine in the light of more than a century of Anglo-American peace and common pledges not to resort to war, what unequal numbers of 8-inch and 6-inch gun ships for each still would spell comparative equality of naval power.

If that can be decided, without sacrifice by either of ultimate naval security, American and British naval rivalries at least can be swept into the past.

Credit Crisis Fear In London Fades

Worst News in Connection With Hatry Failures Already Out.

London, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—It is clear from information available tonight that the worst news in connection with the collapse of companies headed by Clarence C. Hatry has already been published. That there will be no credit or financial crisis as a result of the Hatry failures is evident. Despite serious losses, possibly amounting to $38,880,000, the London market will absorb the shock without any difficulty.

The main problem remaining to be settled is how to deal with the shares of the seven concerns barred from the stock exchange last Saturday.

The more popular newspapers tomorrow proclaim in large type that there is no danger of a panic. In the Times, Telegraph and Morning Post the situation is treated less sensationally. Auditors worked all day over the books of the Hatry concerns.

U. S. Nurse Is Seized In Mexican Slaying

Mexico City, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Eva Martinez de Leon, 36 years old, a graduate nurse of Los Angeles, Calif., was held today following the fatal shooting of Dr. Narciso Cosio Aguilar in a downtown office.

It was charged that the nurse fired six shots from a revolver that killed the doctor. The shooting was said to have followed a lovers' quarrel. Mrs. Serafina de Leon, mother of the nurse, lives in Rivera, a suburb of Los Angeles.

TWO CHIEFS AND GUNS THEY WILL TALK ABOUT

President Hoover and Premier MacDonald look genial enough here as compared to the rather vicious appearance of the 8-inch guns on the U. S. S. Pittsburgh (upper right) and the 6-inchers on the U. S. S. Detroit (lower left). It is the difference between 6-inch and 8-inch guns that has held up the Anglo-American naval accord.

DEPRIEST REVEALS HOW TO GET 'SPOILS'

Chicagoan Tells Club Way in Which Thompson Gave Him Aid.

HEFLIN CLASH PROMISED

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Ways and means of playing politics and getting "your share of the patronage" was the theme of a talk given here last night by Oscar DePriest, Negro representative of Chicago, before the Colored Republican Club.

"Don't take pay as a campaign worker," he said. "If you are paid election day, you can't go to a party council later and claim it still owes you something."

Citing his own experience as an example, he declared:

"I worked two years and spent $15,000 of my money doing preliminary work for Bill Thompson, now our mayor. When I started he asked me how much I needed, and I told him nothing—that when the pie was cut, I would point out my piece. I did."

Paying his respects to Senator Heflin, of Alabama, the Negro representative remarked:

"I saw in a paper the other day that Tom Heflin, the senator from Alabama, said if I showed up in the Senate rest rooms he would throw me out. Well, just for that I'm going over there and see if he's big enough. I'm not looking for trouble, but I'm not going a block out of my way to avoid it."

Catholic Organ Quits Publication in Italy

Rome, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—With the suspension today of the Catholic paper Corriere d'Italia, the Osservatore Romano becomes the only Catholic paper in Rome, and this, already the papal organ, will become more so on October 15, when its editorial rooms are removed to the Vatican City.

An editorial in the Corriere d'Italia today said that that paper was the victim of conditions which have struck the whole Catholic press, stressing that for 25 years the Corriere d'Italia was the link between the religious apostolate and patriotic propaganda in difficult times.

Perfumery Firm to Lose 1,500 Gallons Alcohol

Baltimore, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Uncle Sam will not return to Joseph Latin 1,500 gallons of denatured alcohol, billed to his perfumery firm, which prohibition agents seized in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad yards here.

Federal Judge Soper yesterday denied a petition for return of the alcohol. Counsel told the court that his client now is manufacturing perfumes on the Pacific Coast. A prohibition inspector directed seizure of the alcohol, said to have been contained in drums labelled toilet water, because Latin's permit to withdraw alcohol from distilleries had been revoked two months previously.

Canned, Whole-Cooked Chickens Put on Sale

Whole-cooked chickens in tin cans are one of the latest dishes to grace the dinner tables throughout the country, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture, and offers a new thing in the marketing of poultry products.

The bureau says that the birds are inspected for wholesomeness before cooking by the bureau representatives operating under a Nation-wide inspection service for the quality and condition of dairy and poultry products.

"If the consumer prefers to do his own cooking," says the statement, "he may buy a bird that has been dressed, drawn and hard-chilled at the poultry plant and marketed in individual containers under Government inspection.

"The new method of marketing whole-dressed birds in cans, cooked and ready to serve, will doubtless enlarge the market for poultry, inasmuch as canned poultry can be sold in retail stores everywhere where canned goods are carried."

LINDBERGH LANDS AT PORT OF SPAIN

THRONGS CHEER FLIERS

Port of Spain, Trinidad, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Landing here two minutes ahead of his schedule at 4:32 p. m., Col. Charles A. Lindbergh completed the extension of the United States air mail from Miami, Fla., through the West Indies, to the northeast tip of South America.

Tomorrow Lindbergh will take off for Paramaribo, Dutch Guiana, blazing the air-mail trail to the eastern coast of the South American continent. He is accompanied by Mrs. Lindbergh and officials of the Pan-American Airways, sponsoring the trip. Two planes are being used.

Swooping down here in the giant amphibian which he took off in at San Juan, Porto Rico, at 6:02 this morning, Lindbergh was received by officials. He will be the overnight guest of Colonial Governor Geir.

Perfect Flying Conditions.

Virtually perfect flying conditions favored the flight, most of which lay over water passages between the far-scattered Leeward and Windward Islands. Three scheduled air-mail stops, at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; St. John, Antigua, and Port Castries, St. Lucia, were made along the way. A courtesy call of 25 minutes was paid to the colonial governor of St. Johns, who happened to be at the Island of St. Kitts, 57 miles from the capital.

On account of the heavy load of mail Lindbergh found waiting for him at San Juan, it was necessary to take a second plane to carry Juan T. Trippe, president of the Pan-American Airways, and his wife, who are making the trip. Lindbergh flew the mail plane and Mrs. Lindbergh rode with him. Both planes carried radio operators. Charles Lorber was Lindbergh's copilot.

Several Stops Made.

Roaring away from San Juan, the flying colonel first touched St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, at 6:52 a. m., leaving at 7:19. St. Kitts, 164 miles away, was reached at 9:19 and the take-off was made at 9:46.

Proceeding from St. Kitts, Lindbergh landed at 10:35 in the protected harbor of St. Johns, where he had some trouble in getting ashore on account of a large number of boats. He spent 1 hour and 9 minutes there, having his plane inspected and refuelling. The journey started again at 11:46 and at 1:30 p. m. the Island of Martinique was passed. Port Castries, the air mail stop for St. Lucia, was reached at 1:59 and was left at 2:45.

At Port Castries, a large crowd lustily cheered the transatlantic aviator and, his bride. Mrs. Lindbergh was showered with flowers.

The Island of Trinidad was sighted at 4:27 and 25 minutes later the landing was made.

FOURTH MAN SEIZED IN KIDNAPING HUNT

TRIALS WILL OPEN TODAY

Granite City, Ill., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The body of a man, tentatively identified as that of Jack Wilson, of Detroit, was found lying close to a river dyke near here late yesterday. The man had been shot twice in the head. Police believe he had been "taken for a ride" and his body thrown from the car after he had been killed.

Bass Conley, a cigar store proprietor of Alton, Ill., made the tentative identification. A golf scorecard from a nearby club, found on the dead man's body, bore the names Jack and Bass.

A few days after the kidnapping three men appeared and demanded that the father pay $4,000 for the return of his son.

The elder Cass instructed them to return for the money in a few days and notified the police. When the trio of kidnapers returned they were met by detectives. Joseph Layman, one of the trio, was wounded, and when he sought to escape was later captured. Trial of the three men is scheduled to open in Detroit tomorrow.

Now that Rosenberg, alleged to be the fourth member of the gang, is in custody, it was said a continuance would be asked while he was questioned.

Detectives Nosworthy and Griffin came from Detroit today to take Rosenberg back after he had waived extradition. He made a complete denial of the kidnaping charge, as well as that of being involved in several Chicago drug store robberies.

Police records show he was tried but not convicted on charges of shooting a policeman in Cleveland, Ohio, and that he had been arrested for many store robberies in Michigan.

Plane Stowaway Hurt in Car Crash

Arthur Schreiber Is Near Death After Auto Hits Another.

Newburyport, Mass., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Arthur Schreiber, 22, Portland, Me., boy who flew the Atlantic safely as a stowaway aboard the French plane the Yellow Bird, probably was fatally injured in an automobile accident on the Newburyport turnpike here late today.

Schreiber was taken to a hospital with a fractured skull. Five companions in the car with him, all from Portland, were less seriously injured.

Maurice Drees, the driver, tried, police said, to cut out of line in the heavy traffic. The car, going fast, just missed a head-on collision and then hit a car going in the same direction. It turned over off the road. The car belonged to Morris R. Schreiber, the youth's father.

Gov. Roosevelt Cites Incident as One of Few Unjust Results From Baumes Law; Other Felonies Occurred 15 Years Ago, He Relates.

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Albert N. Garstin, 44, former business manager of a Louisville newspaper, who passed a bad check while on a drinking bout, pleaded guilty and was sent to Dannemora Prison for life as a fourth offender, is a free man. Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt today announced executive clemency, and Garstin, who has served two years and four months on the check charge, will try again to stage a "comeback," in which he was successful once for twelve years.

The judge who sentenced Garstin, the district attorney who prosecuted him and many newspaper publishers and friends have sought Garstin's freedom for several months, claiming that his life sentence was an example of the grave injustice which can be done under a mandatory law such as the Baumes act.

Gov. Roosevelt, in announcing his action, commented at length on the case. He said he believed the Garstin case should not be affected by the Baumes statute.

"It was aimed at more serious offenses and more particularly those of force or violence," the governor stated. "While the Baumes laws, as a whole, were absolutely necessary and have served as a salutary deterrent to crime, I believe that in a few isolated cases such as the present one, the result is unjust. The district attorney of New York County writes me that this was one of the cases he brought to the attention of the State Crime Commission in his efforts to induce the commission to introduce a bill modifying the law."

The governor also pointed out that Garstin, "an experienced and able journalist, was serving a life sentence for issuing a check for $300, the other three sentences being for similar offenses, and covering a period of twenty-one years, and that for fifteen years he had led an upright life." In each instance, Garstin was drinking at the time of his offense, the governor remarking, "He seems to owe his present plight apparently to overindulgence in intoxicants."

Garstin was sentenced to prison by Judge Max S. Levine in general sessions in June, 1927, upon the evidence of his former convictions, and thereafter the newspaper man began his fight for re-sentencing, revealing that he had been pardoned during one of his prior prison terms.

Short Pants and No Socks Fashion's Decree for Men

Long Beach, Calif., Sept. 22 (A.P.). Knee-length pants, sleeves to the elbows, sockless feet and hatless heads, silk for the rich and denim for the poor—these are the styles a fashion center for men dictated here yesterday in the first national men's dress reform parade.

And because the judges believed Edmund G. Guerney, dressmaking teacher of the Long Beach Polytechnic High School, had evolved the sanest solution of a summer ensemble for men that will relieve the oppressed male from heavy, hot clothes and a perspiring brow, $200 was awarded him.

The parade was sponsored by the Long Beach Chapter of Sciots in a serious attempt to impress upon manhood in general and clothnig manufacturers in particular the antiquated state into which mere men's clothing has fallen compared to the flimsy, cool gowns of the modern maiden and mother, so conducive to summer comfort.

Here's what Guerney wore:

A light gray, tan tweed suit of full length trousers and sleeves, bloused at the waist and cut with a V-neck. A shirt of pongee silk, open at the waist and with elbow-length sleeves. The beltless, suspenderless trousers were buttoned to the shirt on the inside. Light shoes and socks completed the outfit. Guerney was without a chapeau.

Forty-nine other contestants, who ran him a close race, displayed knee-length trousers or shorts, half sleeves and sleeveless shirts, bareheads and shoes without stockings. Neckties were taboo throughout. Colors were rampant—pale blue pajamas, red and green checked pajamas, flaming striped pants and brilliant shirts.

Workmen wore knee-length blue denim overalls with sleeves cut to the elbows and walked without socks.

Several thousand spectators lined the streets and roared acclaim and approval.

(Associated Press.)

Harry F. Sinclair, imprisoned oil magnate, said yesterday that his petition for clemency, which was denied Saturday by President Hoover, had had not been based upon ill health, but upon the claim that he was sentenced for doing something not prohibited by statute or rule of court.

Sinclair's statement was issued from the District of Columbia Jail and was accompanied by one from his business associate, Henry Mason Day, who with him was sentenced for jury shadowing in the Sinclair trial for conspiracy in securing the Teapot Dome oil leases. Day also asserted that jury shadowing had not theretofore been construed as contempt of court.

After stating that his health was "as good as could be expected, under the circumstances," Sinclair said that "observation of a jury only became contempt of court when I engaged in it." He then vigorously attacked the statement of Attorney General Mitchell recommending a denial of commutation, declaring that it could be "summed up to mean that I should remain in jail because I was acquitted of an alleged offense for which he feels I should have been convicted."

Upholds Jury Shadowing.

"I am imprisoned," Sinclair said, "not for having committed any crime defined by law, not for having violated any rule theretofore established by the court, but because I caused a jury that was trying me for an alleged conspiracy against the Government, to be kept under surveillance. For this I was judged in contempt. No member of the jury was approached by operatives in my employ nor were they molested in any way nor were they even conscious that they were being observed and they so testified."

The oil man declared that he had approved the jury shadowing and felt justified in doing so, because "of the knowledge that the same identical practice had been indulged in by the Government so frequently that it had become a common occurrence.

Calls It Usual Practice.

"Affidavits of numerous former employees of the Intelligence Service of the United States," Sinclair said, "including a former chief of that service, were submitted with my application, showing conclusively that the practice of jury surveillance was a usual practice by United States attorneys throughout the country, with the approval of the attorney general and the knowledge of the judges. I purpose to secure the publication of these affidavits."

Sinclair said there had been no sinister purpose in what he had done and that no court had so found.

"The Attorney General," Sinclair said, "states, if he is correctly quoted in the press, that while no corrupt purpose had been consummated, he was convinced that the jury shadowing operations were conducted for the sinister and ulterior purpose of influencing the jury."

Court Found No Sinister Aim.

"If he had read the record, as he said he has," the oil man maintained, "he must know that the trial court which heard all the facts, indulged in no such speculation, for I repeat the court found no sinister purpose in what I did, and the Supreme Court which reviewed the facts found no such purpose."

Day's much shorter statement said that he had petitioned for commutation of sentence because he considered his further incarceration "was not necessary to make a new rule—first established in my case—more binding, and that my past life was proof that I was a decent and useful citizen who had, at every opportunity, served his country well."

Sinclair was first sentenced to three months in jail in May for contempt of the Senate and this term expired in July. In the meantime, however, he had received an additional sentence of six months on the jury shadowing charge, and Day had been ordered to serve four months. It was from these terms that the two sought relief in August.

Will Be Out in November.

Their petitions were submitted to the present prosecuting attorney, the former prosecutor who handled their cases and the trial judges. While the recommendations of these officials were not made public, it was reported that at least two had opposed commutation.

Attorney General Mitchell then recommended to the President that no action be taken, as to do so "would undermine the confidence of the public in the administration of justice."

Sinclair's term will expire November 22, since parts of his two terms ran concurrently, and Day will be freed two weeks earlier.

LAND OF THE SOVIETS OFF FOR CONTINENT

Russian Plane Leaves Attu Island on Its Way to New York.

SHIP IS NEARING U. S.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The Russian plane "Land of the Soviets" left Attu, most westward island of the Aleutian chain in Alaska, for Dutch Harbor this morning, a brief message received at the naval radio station at Bremerton, Wash., said today.

The message gave no details, the naval station reported, and did not report the time at which the plane took off or when it was expected to arrive at Dutch Harbor, a distance of approximately 500 miles.

Weather conditions were not mentioned in the radio message, but the sky was overcast with heavy clouds along the coast in the Pacific Northwestern States.

The monoplane, carrying a crew of four men, is attempting a 12,000-mile flight eastward from Moscow to New York.

The crew of the plane includes S. A. Shestakov, pilot; P. E. Bolotov, second pilot; B. V. Sterlingv, navigator, and D. V. Fufaev, mechanic.

The route followed by the Soviet airmen across the North Pacific has been flown only twice before, by English aviators, one of whom met disaster, and in 1924 by one of the Army world-flight planes, which was forced to turn back before reaching Japan.

From Dutch Harbor the Land of the Soviets was to hop to Seward, thence to Sitka, and from there to Seattle, San Francisco, Chicago and New York.

Built by popular subscriptions from millions of members of the Aviation and Chemical Society, the Soviet plane is driven by two 600-horsepower engines and is of all-metal construction.

Cruising near the Aleutian Islands to aid the plane in an emergency was the Soviet supply ship Krassny Vimpel, or Red Pennant.

Car Kills Youth Unhurt When Yacht Wrecked

Tarrytown, N. Y., Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Arthur S. Allen, Jr., of Kelbourne avenue, Philipse Manor, N. Y., who escaped injury when his yacht was wrecked on rocks off the coast of Greenland last July, was struck and fatally injured by an automobile near his home tonight. He was taken to Tarrytown Hospital with a broken back and fractured skull, and died there a few hours later.

Allen, a student of naval architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, made the expedition to the north in his yacht Direction, accompanied by Rockwell Kent, the artist, and Lucian Cary, jr., son of the author. They were shipwrecked off Godthaab, Greenland, and obliged to tramp several days to the nearest settlement.

Man Held in Kidnaping Of Rich Detroit Youth

Chicago, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Seized on suspicion by Chicago detectives and identified by his police record, Abe Rosenberg, alleged Detroit gunman, gangster and kidnaper, will be returned to Detroit in connection with the kidnaping there of David Cass, 22 years old, who disappeared July 25.

No trace has ever been found of Cass, son of a wealthy Detroit real estate operator, police said. Rosenberg is reputed head of the Purple Gang of Detroit extortionists and gunmen, according to officials, and was questioned in connection with the massacre of seven gangsters here on St. Valentine's Day.

STUNTS THRILL CROWDS

Kansas City, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Pat Love, Richmond, Ind., landed at Fairfax airport at 3:24:32 o'clock this afternoon, leading four pilots who completed a circular race through Kansas and Missouri in the opening major event of the international air circus which began here yesterday and is scheduled to continue through next Sunday.

William Ong, Kansas City, was second into the port; F. M. Johnson, of Kansas City, third, and Tex La Grone, of Kansas City, fourth. Three pilots who took off yesterday on a flight that included Topeka, Kans.; St. Joseph, Kirksville, Columbia and Marshall, Mo., dropped out before the end of the first day's itinerary.

A crowd, estimate in excess of 25,000 persons, was at the airport today for the program of short races and stunts.

When officials finished their computations, Love was declared winner of the Class A planes in the race with an elapsed time of 4 hours 26 minutes 14 seconds. Johnson was second, with 5 hours seven minutes and 4 seconds.

Freddie Lund, captain of the Waco company stunt team from Troy, Ohio, thrilled the crowd with a tailspin climb while 3,000 feet in the air. Lund headed his plane nearly vertically into the sky and spun while he climbed.

Gibson Will Leave For Rest in Italy

U. S. Ambassador to Belgium Feared to Be Victim of Heart Trouble.

Brussels, Belgium, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—United States Ambassador Hugh S. Gibson will leave Wednesday for Italy for a month of rest on the orders of his physician, who thinks the diplomat is suffering from heart trouble as the result of overwork. The ambassador is curtailing all public receptions.

Ambassador Gibson, in addition to his duties at the Belgian court, long has been one of the most important representatives in Europe of Washington in connection with naval matters and disarmament negotiations.

During the past few months he has made several short visits to London to consult with Ambassador Charles G. Dawes, with reference to the latter's negotiations with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, looking toward a naval agreement between Great Britain and the United States. Earlier this year, as he had on previous occasions, he attended the disarmament conference of the League of Nations at Geneva.

Waggoner to Be Taken To New York for Trial

Cheyenne, Wyo., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—C. D. Waggoner, Telluride, Colo., bank president, will leave here at 8:10 a. m. Monday for New York to stand trial on a charge of using the mails in furtherance of his alleged scheme to defraud six New York banks of a half million dollars.

The last legal barrier to his transfer to New York was removed today with the arrival in Cheyenne of the order of removal which had been signed by a Federal judge.

MORE LIQUOR LAWS NEEDED, IS CLAIM

W. C. T. U. HEARS TALK

Indianapolis, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Congressional legislation clarifying the relationship of State and Federal governments regarding enforcement is necessary before prohibition can be made effective, Gov. Harry G. Leslie, of Indiana, declared today at ceremonies in connection with the national Women's Christian Temperance Union's fifty-fifth annual convention here.

The governor's statement was made at the unveiling at the Indiana statehouse of a bronze plaque commemorating the election in this city 50 years ago of Miss Frances Elizabeth Willard as president of the W. C. T. U. Gov. Leslie accepted the tablet, made by Lorado Taft, Chicago sculptor, following presentation by Mrs. Ella A. Boole, of Brooklyn, N. Y., national W. C. T. U. president.

"Today Indiana is as dry as law can make it under present enforcement conditions," Gov. Leslie declared.

Clarification Needed, Claim.

"She is in the forefront of those States who are cooperating with the Federal Government in the enforcement of the prohibition act. But to make prohibition more effective there must be legislation by Congress to clarify the relationship of the Federal enforcing authorities to the enforcement authorities of the several sovereign States. Enforcement responsibility must be placed.

"The effectiveness of prohibition," he added, "is dependent upon public opinion."

The tablet ceremonies were attended by three members of the temperance union who were present at the election of Miss Willard.

Liquor Given Chance, Claim.

Stanley High, editor of the Christian Herald, in an address prepared for delivery at the night session, said the American people, "in good faith with the liquor business for three-quarters of a century," had given liquor a chance. "But," he added, "they found out about liquor. That is why we have prohibition." He said prohibition would continue as long as folk remember what they learned about the liquor business.

High questioned the purpose of those who want prohibition abolished when he said: "I do not believe the average wet newspaper fights against prohibition because it believes it will gain by winning the fight. Nor do I believe that liquor is so hard to get that the average wet is made wet by his thirst. He can get liquor, only it is very inconvenient and not so good."

They Call It Politics

By CARTER FIELD

THE Canadian government is contemplating a wider range of activity in controlling the illicit liquor traffic.

To clear up uncertainty as to its power it has instructed its delegation to the Imperial Conference of British Dominions which is to convene in London on October 8 to obtain a ruling This ruling will determine whether the Canadian government has a right to operate beyond its own boundaries, or whether when the 3-mile limit is passed all power is taken over by the British government.

Bearing not only on the ordinary problem of rum running from Canada, across the 3,000-mile border, but also on control of rumrunners along the Atlantic Coast, determination of this question is of more vital interest as a matter of fact in Washington than either in Ottawa or London.

* * * *

FOR example, it is regarded by the Ottawa government at the moment as very questionable whether a Canadian government vessel would have the right to pursue a suspected rumrunner beyond the 3-mile limit along the Canadian coast. Strange as the limitation may appear, it is stated positively that, although the issue has been raised repeatedly in the past, long before the question of rum running came to the fore, the weight of authority and precedents has been against wider power. The Canadians believe that action by the imperial conference is necessary to give the Canadian government authority to extend its vigilance in the waters just off the Dominion's coasts.

Interwined with this question is another involving whether an imperial statute, extending in its operation to the Dominion, will or will not override a Dominion statute if one is in conflict with the other. The Dominion delegation to the imperial conference will make a strong fight for the greater measure of independence for the Dominion as to this. All British shipping, it is pointed out, is controlled by British law. It is a very involved question as to where relative authorities begin and end, and the outcome of the conference on this point will be of great importance to shipping interests.

* * * *

WHILE these two questions are the only outstanding ones this time in which the United States has a vital interest, there is another in which there is tremendous interest both in the dominions generally and in the mother country, and which, incidentally, interests the United States because so frequently in the past Washington has been keenly interested in the interrelations of the British Empire. The last time, it so happens, was the most important of all. That was when Canada, Australia and New Zealand, just prior to the Washington arms conference, insisted on the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance.

The third question which Canada will put up to the imperial conference relates to the power of imperial veto. Legally, the British Parliament has the right to veto any act of the Canadian Parliament. Actually, this historic right is much like the right of veto of an act of parliament by the British King, or the right of the House of Lords to refuse to approve what has been done by the House of Commons. It has been 50 years since the British Parliament vetoed an act of the Canadian Parliament.

Under the law, however, the governor general of Canada can be restrained from approving any act of the Canadian Parliament, and can insist upon its being sent to London for the "signification of the king's pleasure."

* * * *

THERE is all the more interest in Washington in this situation, which in view of the extremely cordial spirit could scarcely be characterized as a controversy, because it comes on the eve of the arms conference from which an agreement limiting the tonnage of cruisers and extending the holiday in battleship construction is confidently expected.

Timed just a few months before, it follows precisely the chronology of the imperial conference of 1921, which preceded the Washington conference.

But from the rum-running angle it comes on the heels of a new epidemic of firing on Canadian vessels by American rum chasers. The case of the Shawnee, fired on while sailing in ballast from Bermuda to Halifax, was filling the Canadian newspapers just as the delegation prepared to sail for London for the imperial conference.

Incidentally the feeling of Canada toward the United States, if newspaper editorials are to be accepted, has been injured a little in the last few months by the tariff discussion, one of the Western papers in the Dominion having characterized the increased rates on Canadian products as "savage."

NAVY AGAINST U.S. YARDS, BLACK SAYS

New York Representative Asks That Lobby Quiz Be Broadened.

BIG WASTE IS CHARGED

New York, Sept. 22 (N.Y.W.N.S.).—Charging that the Navy Department has for some years shown antagonism to the navy yards and a corresponding favoritism to private shipyards in the awarding of contracts, Representative Loring M. Black, of New York, demanded otday that the inquiry into the ship building lobby in Washington be extended to a search of the cause for this situation.

If the investigation now being made by the subcommittee of the Senate naval affairs committee does not thoroughly expose this phase of the activities of the private shipbuilding interests, Representative Black said, Congress should respectfully petition President Hoover to appoint a committee of accounts to go over the Navy Department's records of the costs of building cruiser and other naval craft since 1920.

Hits Shipyard Profits.

"For the last six or seven years," he said, "the Navy Department has been rather antagonistic to the navy yards, while private shipyards have been making profits which seem unreasonable. I hope that the Senate subcommittee, in looking into the activities of William B. Shearer at the Geneva conferences and of other naval lobbyists of the ship builders, will not fail to solve the question of why the Navy people should be against thir own navy yards. There is plenty of material on this subject to be had. If this committee doesn't get it President Hoover should be petitioned respectfully by Congress ot appoint a board of accounts to go after it."

Black said he had been considering asking the House appropriations committee to make this inquiry, but that the house was not yet completely organized, while the Senate naval affairs committee could include it in its present investigation.

"It is frequently said that the cost of building ships in navy yards is too high in comparison with the costs in private shipyards. This is mistaken conception, which smacks of the activities of the shipbuilders' lobbyists. 'It is not true that it costs the Government less to build ships in private shipyards than in the navy yards. For example, in 1927, private yards bid $42,430,000 for four cruisers, while two of the navy yards—Puget Sound and Mare Island—bid $30,411,920. Of six contracts awarded at that time, four went to private companies and only two to the navy yards.

Sees Saving to Government.

"Granting that private shipyards are a necessary adjunct of national defense, so are the navy yards. The navy yards should be looked upon as the primary bases.

"For the 1927 construction to which I have referred, the New York Navy Yard did not bid. Assuming that two of the navy yards on the Atlantic Coast could each have built one vessel at the cost estimated by the Western navy yards, the Government would have saved almost $12,000,000.

"Anyone who doubts the activity of the shipbuilding lobby in this direction, should have been in Washington at the last session when the fifteen-cruiser bill was up. When we tacked on the Dallinger amendment providing that every alternate cruiser should be built in a navy yard, a lot of people lost interest in the bill."

Attorney General Brundage, it is reported, probably will announce his candidacy on a prohibition platform as outlined by the Hoover enforcement committee.

Mrs. McCormick is the first woman in Illinois who has aspired for a seat in the United States Senate. She has long been active in politics and was elected representative-at-large by a plurality of more than 600,000. This demonstration of strength is generally conceded to have brought her prominently to the fore as a senatorial possibility.

(Associated Press.)

Capital political leaders received with interest but without surprise the announcement yesterday by Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick, representative from Illinois, that she would oppose Senator Charles S. Deneen for the Republican senatorial nomination next spring.

One of the few women to aspire to the Senate, Mrs. McCormick is seeking the seat held by her late husband, Medill McCormick, in the chamber where her father, Senator Mark Hanna, of Ohio, long a Republican party leader, once served.

As the wife and daughter of these Republican senators, Mrs. McCormick is a familiar figure in Washington, where she has been for the last few months in her own right a member of the House.

Her contest against Senator Deneen had been speculated upon in political circles for some time. It was he who defeated the late Senator McCormick for renomination six years ago. Deneen is now just ending that term. McCormick died shortly before his term expired and shortly after his defeat for renomination.

Informed of Mrs. McCormick's announcement of her candidacy both Deneen and Senator Glenn (Republican), Illinois, reserved comment. There is some interest as to what part, if any, Glenn will take in the forthcoming Republican contest in the State.

If nominated and elected, Mrs. McCormick would be the first woman to win her way to the Senate by a campaign. One other woman has served in the Senate, Mrs. W. H. Felton, of Georgia, who was appointed by the Governor of Georgia in 1922 to fill a vacancy. She served but a few hours before voluntarily retiring.

stationed at Ichang, Hupeh, had shown a tendency to return to Kwangtung Province and possibly join the Kwangsi reactionaries in an attempt to overthrow the present Canton government, which is favorable to Nanking. This division gained its nickname by its brilliant campaign as the spearhead of the Nationalist forces' triumphant advance in 1926 from Canton to Peking, in which it achieved a long list of victories against the northerners, with no defeats.

Officials, however, said the Ironsides had not indicated any such intention but had been ordered north to take up garrison duties along the Lunghai Railway, which runs across Honan Province. "This movement," it was said, "possibly gave rise to the foregoing erroneous reports."

The same officials not only denied reports of civil war but said that "the government's troop disbandment program is proceeding in all areas." Gen. Ho Ying Ching, inspector general of military training, said, "The reorganization of military unity under direct control of Nanking will be completed in a fortnight, while those under the authority of other leaders, such as Feng Yu Hsiang and Yen Hsi Shan (closely associated in governing Shaansi Province in the Northwest and recently reported to have sold allegiance to Nanking), will be completed by January 1, 1930."

Japanese dispatches from Canton today said the Kwangtung government had telegraphed Nanking that Kwangsi radicals were again active and were believed to be planning a fresh campaign against Canton.

Earlier this year they fought their way almost to the gates of that rich commercial city, but were finally driven off with bloody losses.

However, Nanking official circles said, "the southern provinces are quiet," and reliably informed circles here did not believe hostilities had broken out anywhere in China.

These Chinese observers believe the movement is directed not only against President Chiang but also against Minister of Finance T. V. Soong, Minister of Labor and Commerce A. H. Tung and others. The campaign has taken the form of numerous complaints to the central Kuomintang headquarters accusing government officials of "maladministration."

Tariff Commission and the President should equalize differences in conditions of competition instead of using the existing differences in costs of production formula. The finance committee tariff framers now would restore the latter measuring rod, which the Democrats favor.

Consideration Long Way Off.

The consideration of the controversial rate schedules appears to be a long way off. When they do come up, the Western Republicans are organized to contest every industrial rate increase. Whether they intend doing this in piecemeal fashion or by motion to recommit with instructions that a bill be reported confined solely to agricultural revision remains to be determined.

Democratic tariff statements continued to appear over the week-end, Senator Caraway, of Arkansas, saying he could not reconcile the policy of President Hoover in remaining silent while the tariff debate rages with the President's "formidable declaration" against the debenture during the pendency of the farm bill.

Referring to the statement of Senator Watson, of Indiana, the Republican leader, that the President had been advised by the former to keep out of the tariff controversy while the bill was in its legislative stages, Caraway inquired if Watson did not give the President his "invaluable advice" during the farm debate in time, "or if the usually considerate President ignored that advice."

Takes Slap at Hoover.

The Arkansas senator said it was difficult to believe that the President, after calling an extraordinary session for a special purpose, should be "so indifferent to the perversion of that purpose as to withhold from the administration spokesmen in charge any idea of what he wants."

He said the flexible provisions had been framed by the House in such a manner as to make the President a "complete dictator" in fixing tariff rates and that the tariff commission under the House bill would have been "absolutely subject to the President's will" because appointments could have been made without regard to party affiliation.

With the decision by the finance committee Republicans to restrict the executive's flexible authority virtually to existing law, and to leave the tariff commission bipartisan as at present, Caraway saw a "reluctant abandonment" by the majority of what the President wanted.

He deduced from this that the "president, with his keen sense of the danger that lies in the enactment of so gross and extortionate a tariff, has advised his legislative captains that they must carry the burden."

House Plans Recesses Through October 14

(Associated Press.)

The empty formality of meeting and adjourning twice a week for almost a month lay before the House as it prepared to obey at noon today the mandate of the resolution under which Congress quit work in June for a mid-summer recess.

Forewarned that there would be no business transacted in the House before October 14, most of the members were continuing their vacation until that time and neither Speaker Longworth nor Representative Tilson, of Connecticut, the majority leader, were in the city to preside over the session. One of the few members who have returned will wield the gavel for the brief meeting.

While the date for the House to settle down to work officially has been set for October 14, there is little prospect that it will have anything to do at that time. All of its work has been cleared away until the Senate finishes with the tariff bill and leaders have indicated that the three-day recesses probably will be continued beyond that period.

CURRENT EVENTS IN VIRGINIA AND MARYLAND

VIRGINIA'S HIGHWAY WORK BEING PUSHED

$350,000 Is Being Expended This Month in Road Construction.

$8,430,979 FOR YEAR

Richmond, Va., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Highway construction work costing between $300,000 and $350,000 is under way this month in Virginia as part of the "wind-up" work of one of the largest annual road-building programs in the history of the department, officials of the State Highway Department said today.

It is estimated that the work in September is costing $125,000 to $150,000 in contract work and between $190,000 and $200,000 in convict labor. It was pointed out by Highway Commissioner Henry G. Shirley that September is one of the last months of the year during which large amounts of construction work is done and that such activities of the department will be materially less during the remaining months of the year, especially in northern Virginia and in the mountainous sections.

Records of the department show that up to September 1 there had been $3,657,000 expended this year in contract work, and $4,773,000 in convict work, making a total of $8,430,979. This total compares with $8,250,000 for the corresponding part of last year. It is less, however, than the record year of 1927, when on September 1 there had been a total of $11,055,000 expended in highway construction work.

June, July Peak Months.

The peak months in construction work this year have been June and July, the figures for these months being $385,000 and $323,000, respectively.

While road building work has been widely distributed throughout the State this year, southwest Virginia had had an unusually large amount, it was said. The greater part of the work being done this month is in the southwest section.

The construction map of the department shows road work now under way or being completed in practically every section of the State. In southwest Virginia work is being completed on route 106, between Clinchport and the West Virginia line. Work also is being done on the road between Bristol and Gate City. Other roads upon which work is being done in the southwest section include the road between Jonesville and the North Carolina line, route 103; road between Clintwood and Pound, route 121; between Raven and Grundy, in Buchanan County, route 126; road between Wytheville and Bluefield, W. Va., road between Radford and Dublin, in Pulask County, route 11; road between Christiansburg and Blacksburg, route 23, in Montgomery County.

Big Project Completed.

One of the big projects completed this summer was construction work on the road between Rocky Mount and Martinsville.

In the eastern section of the State work is being completed this year on the cutoff between Hopewell and Burrowsville on the Richmond-Norfolk highway. This cutoff serves to shorten the distance by some 10 miles.

Other construction jobs shown to be under way on the map at the present time are: Road between West Point and King William, route 30, in King William County; road between Brays and Caret, route 17, in Essex County; road between Warsaw and Kilmarnock, route 37, in Richmond County.

In north-central section work is being done on the road between Culpeper and the point where it joins with route 16 toward Orange.

Bids will be received by the highway department until Tuesday for the construction of a 225-foot bridge in Essex County on route 38; one 75-foot truss of steel on Blue Stone River, Tazewell County; 2½ miles of grading and drainage on route 17 in Rockingham County, and nine-tenths mile of macadam work on route 33 in Augusta County.

Auto Crash Lands Man In Purcellville Jail

Special to The Washington Post.

Purcellville, Va., Sept. 22.—Pruitt Peterson, colored, who lives near Unison, this county, is under arrest, charged with having run over Rachel Rector, colored, 19-year-old daughter of Lewis Rector, of Purcellville, Saturday night. The girl was seriously injured. She was crossing the road after leaving a small confectionery store on the outskirts of town when the automobile hit her. The machine then ran into John Hindman's car, smashing part of it. Hindman rushed for the doctor.

The driver escaped, but not until his license number was taken, and State Traffic Officer Thomas Bell and Deputy Sheriff John Chamblin apprehended Peterson this morning. He was lodged in the Leesburg Jail with a hit-and-run charge.

Danville Veteran Has 90th Birthday

Capt. G. T. Miller Keeps to His Room, Suffering From War Wound.

Special to The Washington Post.

Danville, Va., Sept. 22.—Capt. G. T. Miller, one of Danville's oldest residents, celebrated his ninetieth birthday at his home here today. He has been confined to his room for the last five years, suffering from a wound he received in the Civil War, when he lost a leg. He has lived in Danville continuously since 1859, excepting the period he spent in Confederate service.

He enlisted in Capt. Joseph Cabell's local contingent and took part in the famous Pickett's charge at Gettysburg, where he was wounded in the leg. He was treated by Confederate surgeons on the field, but could not be carried away, and so was found by Federal stretcher bearers, who removed him to a hospital, where he underwent the amputation of his leg. Later he was interned at Fort Lookout, Md., and was exchanged in June, 1864.

FAIR AT BEDFORD OPENS TOMORROW

Merchants Offer Additional Prizes for Entries; School Day Wednesday.

'HOME-COMING' FEATURE

Special to The Washington Post.

Bedford, Va., Sept. 22.—The annual exhibit of the Bedford County Fair Association will begin tomorrow and last four days. Elaborate plans have been made for the fair and the week has been styled "home-coming week" for Bedford County. Invitations have been sent to former residents asking them to come back during the fair.

Additional prizes have been offered by the merchants of the town for tobacco entries, these prizes being divided into two classes, for tobacco raisers in the county and that raised outside the County of Berford. Prizes are offered each year for products covering a wide range and exhibits are not confined to the county.

The program for the week is varied, some special feature being offered each day. Music will be furnished by the Bedford Firemen's Band. Miss Bedford, queen of the fair, will be crowned on the opening day. School day is an important feature of the fair and will be held Wednesday. A prize will be given the school having the largest percentage of attendance.

Owners to Fight Abandoning Land

Suits Involving 4,000 Virginians Are Filed in Park Dispute.

Special to The Washington Post.

Luray, Va., Sept. 22.—Recent information from Richmond is to the effect that more than 4,000 Virginians—one-third of them residents of Page County—will contest their rights before the courts of this State, and later before the United States Supreme Court—before they will surrender their homes and lands in the Blue Ridge for the Shenandoah National Park.

Suits involving this many residents of Virginia have already been filed to make good land and money pledges. These pledges, contributors declare, were made when the project was first discussed and were without due consideration. They also declare that many of the pledges were made by minors who had no authority to make them.

Page, Warren, Rappahannock, Madison, Greene, Rockingham and Augusta Counties will consolidate their efforts in resisting the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission in acquiring lands in the Blue Ridge for park purposes.

The Warren County Court, which for some time has been holding in abeyance the contested case of A. J. Rudacille against the Virginia Conservation and Development Commission for condemnation of the lands in that county for park purposes, will establish a State-wide precedent as to the final outcome of Blue Ridge real estate for park purposes.

Children's Detention Home Is Advocated

Special to The Washington Post.

Winchester, Va., Sept. 22.—A detention home for dependent children is being urged by the local chapter of the American Red Cross, and it is expected a special appeal for such funds will be made in connection with the annual roll call, soon to be launched.

Miss Martha F. Stowers, executive secretary, reporting at an executive committee meeting last night, said a considerable number of children's cases are now being considered, and that they have to be boarded in private homes until they can be placed in homes with good moral surroundings. Although the World War ended eleven years ago, the chapter continues to aid former service men and their families, of whom 32 were given assistance during the month.

Danville, Va., Sept. 22.—Continuance of the community chest plan here has been decided upon by a meeting of 200 citizens. It was decided, however, that a special committee should scrutinize the eight beneficiary organizations, and eliminate those not actually engaged in charitable enterprise.

William P. Boatwright, president of the Community Chest, has called a emeting of the executive committee for Monday to name the committee. Plans will go forward without delay, however, for the campaign, which is to be held in October.

WHO'ZIT?

("Whozit?" is a test of your knowledge of history and current events. The statements below describe a character whom you should be able to identify. Match your knowledge and memory against those of your friends.)

1. He was not an American.

ARLINGTON COUNTY.
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

Fire of supposedly incendiary origin threatened the loss of contents of the Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co.'s store on Columbia pike, Arlington, at an early hour yesterday morning.

The building, lying immediately adjacent to the Arlington firehouse, no other department was called out.

Rushing into the building from the rear with a line of hose the firemen soon had the fire under control. The damage was estimated at $2,000.

The finding under the desk of a bucket, claimed to have contained oil, by the firemen leads the firemen and county police to believe the fire was of incendiary origin.

An investigation is being made.

CATHOLICS DISCUSS POLITICAL ISSUES

500 PRESENT AT SESSION

Special to The Washington Post.

Norfolk, Va., Sept. 22.—Echoes of last year's political campaign were heard today in the sessions of the tenth annual convention of the Richmond Holy Name diocesan union, which with more than 500 present met with St. Mary's Church of Norfolk as host.

References to politics however, contained nothing of malice, being made only to urge members of "this religious, Catholic society to be more conscientious and consistent in the practice of those principles of justice and truth."

The Rev. Albert E. Smith, editor of the Baltimore Catholic Review, recalling the life of Cardinal Gibbons, with whom he was initially associated made the first reference when he said the Cardinal often had told him that "you and I know that there always was and always will be some leader to stir other people to wrath and bigotry."

The Very Right Rev. Felix F. Kaup, vicar general of the Richmond diocese, reminded the delegation that "twice recently our Catholic intelligence has been insulted; first, by the resurrection three years ago of the spurious Knights of Columbus oath, the validity of which was disproved in 1909, and, second, by the things that were hurled into our faces last fall."

"For those reasons," he continued, "the Holy Name Union must be more conscientious and consistent in the practice of those principles of justice and truth."

The vicar general stressed the importance of members of the Holy Name Union being the "proper exemplification of the Catholic faith" in their dealings with non-Catholics with whom they rub elbows in daily life. He also said that "as citizens of a community, your church teaches you to be law-abiding" he stressed the responsibility of citizenship by telling the delegates that "in our democracy, you hold the fate of the nation in your hands to the extent you exercise as citizens your right of franchise. This is a religious society but it is composed of citizens."

MILL-STRIKE AREA QUIET ON SABBATH

Protest Meetings, Called for Sunday, Fail to Materialize.

DEATH REWARD IS SET

Charlotte, N. C., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Quiet of the normal Sabbath of a Southern city today ruled in Gaston and Mecklenburg Counties, sharply contrasting with the situation that had the two in an uproar for ten days.

Activities of the National Textile Workers Union and the Communist leaders, whose efforts to hold meetings and form organizations in the cotton mills of this section were the target for much of the reported mob violence and one death, were either suspended or they operated under cover. Reports at headquarters of the International Labor Defense offices here were that such meetings were being held secretly.

The International Labor Defense had called "mass protest" meetings for September 21 and 22 over the death of Mrs. Ella May Wiggins, union member, who was shot and killed September 14 by a mob when she and 21 others were turned back in Gastonia while trying to attend a meeting called by William F. Dunne, secretary of the Communist Party in America, and National Textile Workers Union officials. These meetings were to be Nation-wide, but if any of them were held in this section they were not reported from any source.

The American Civil Liberties Union through Roger Baldwin, its representative here, has announced it would pay a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and conviction of the slayer of Mrs Wiggins.

Seven men had been arrested at an inquest begun a week ago and charged with manslaughter in connection with the death of Mrs. Wiggins. They were released in $1,000 bond each. The inquest is to be concluded next Wednesday.

The next superior court action scheduled in connection with the various labor troubles is the special term of Mecklenburg Superior Court to try 16 National Textile Workers Union members accused of slaying O. F. Aderholt, Gastonia police chief, in a clash with strikers there in June.

The special term will begin September 30.

MRS. STONE FACING POISON TRIAL TODAY

65 TALESMEN CALLED

Belair, Md., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The stage was set here today for the opening tomorrow of the murder trial of Mrs. Hattie Stone, 40, of Havre de Grace, who was charged with causing the death from poison of her 15-year-old son, George Stone, last June. "I am ready for the trial," was the word coming from her cell in the county jail here, where she had been since her arrest three months ago. An indictment was returned September 13. The accused woman elected to have the case heard by jury.

Mrs. Stone was arrested June 13, after a chemist's report to the State indicated presence of poison in the viscera of her son, who died nine days before. Later the State exhumed the bodies of Edward Stone, her husband, and Edgar Stone, an elder son, the only other members of the Stone family, both of whom had died suddenly within the last two years. Convulsions and nausea were the symptoms of the final illness of the father and two boys.

Chemists reported presence of a small amount of poison in the vitals of the husband but none in the older son. No action was taken by the grand jury, however, in connection with the death of the father. The State had summoned 40 extra talesmen in addition to the regular panel of 25 for the opening of the trial. It was expected that many would be exhausted by challenge. Between 50 and 60 witnesses have been summoned.

Because of widespread interest in the trial the sheriff and his officers looked to the State police for assistance in handling the crowds that are expected to attend.

Chairs and tables have been placed in the small courtroom for the convenience of the newspaper men, and special telegraph facilities have been installed in the town for their use.

Widow of Man Once Held As Confederate Spy Dead

Mrs. Rachel Heizein Wallach, 87, widow of Philip Wallach and former resident of Washington, died Saturday at her home in New York.

Born in Cincinnati, Ohio, October 28, 1842, she married before the Civil war and came to Washington at the outbreak of hostilities. Her husband was a member of the Arkansas Grays.

Learning that he was to become a father, Wallach left his regiment and returned to Washington. On the street, in civilian clothes, he was picked up as a Southern spy, but Schuyler Colfax, a neighbor, interwened with President Lincoln, who finally gave Wallach a pass to remain in Washington as long as necessary.

All of Mrs. Wallach's eight children were born in Washington. Besides these children, she is survived by eight grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

The Wallach family has been closely identified with the theater in New York for many years. Mrs. Henry B. Harris, a daughter is proprietor of the Hudson Theater and well known as a producer, while two sons, Samuel and Edgar, are associated in executive capacities with the Warner Bros. Theater.

ALEXANDRIA PLANS FOR MASONIC HOSTS

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
312 S. Washington St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

The fall reunion of Virginia Consistory, No. 2, Scottish Rite Masons, which will be held in this city October 15 to 18, will be probably the most important affair in the annals of Masonry that has ever been held here. The week following the reunion the Supreme Council for the Southern Jurisdiction, Scottish Rite, will be in session in Washington, and at this meeting delegates will be present from every country in the world. These visitors have accepted invitations to be present at the Alexandria reunion when the degrees are conferred. All of them have a particular interest in the new Masonic temple which is being erected as a memorial to George Washington, the Mason, and this will be the first occasion on which the temple has been used for any Masonic purpose.

Members of the consistories from Richmond, Washington and Baltimore already have accepted invitations to confer some of the degrees at the reunion, and the active members of the Supreme Council will confer the thirty-second degree on the afternoon of Friday, October 18, immediately preceding the banquet which will be held in Armory Hall, arrangements having been made for seating 800 guests on that occasion.

This will be the first occasion in Masonic history when any degree has been conferred by the active members of the supreme council, and it is only because this is the first meeting to be held in the new Masonic Temple that these members have agreed to do the work on this occasion. The class of candidates will be one of the largest ever initiated in Alexandria, considerably more than 100 already having been elected to receive the degrees. Photographs of these new members will be placed on the walls of the temple and kept among the Masonic archives.

The new temple, which is being erected on Shooters Hill, in the western section of the city, at a cost of approximately $5,000,000, will be completed in time to be dedicated in 1932, when the new Washington-Mount Vernon boulevard is to be opened in commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the birth of George Washington.

Within the next two or three weeks the work of widening and improving the River road between this city and Washington, for which the State Highway Commission has allotted the sum of $80,000, will be started, announcement to this effect having been made by H. G. Shirley, chairman of the commission.

It has been unofficially stated that this improvement will begin at a point one-half mile south of the Highway bridge, and extend only to Four Mile Run, which will form the new corporation line of Alexandria when the territory recently awarded to the city in its annexation suit becomes a part of the city, January 1. It was the understanding at first that this improvement would extend to the present corporation line, at the intersection of Washington street, extended, and Columbus street, a total distance of approximately four miles. If it stops at the new corporate limits of the city, however, the distance improved will be only about two miles. This is due to the fact that the present State law provides that no State funds for the construction or maintenance of highways shall be used within the corporate limits of any city. The allocation of funds for this improvement was made before the decision of the court in the annexation suit was reached, and Alexandrians hope, therefore, that the roadway may be extended to the present corporate limits.

The new roadway is to be 80 feet wide, will probably have an asphalt surface and the right-of-way is to be 50 feet wide. It will be necessary, according to the highway commission, for the State to purchase right-of-way for the widening of the road, and the cost of this, as well as the cost of the actual road construction, has not yet been determined.

During the construction of the new roadway, traffic will in all probability be detoured through Potomac and Mount Vernon avenue, or through Rosemont, by way of Russell road and Mount Vernon avenue. The construction work will consume, it is understood, approximately three weeks.

A meeting of the civic bureau of the Chamber of Commerce will be held at 8 o'clock this evening, when a number of matters of importance will be considered, John Barton Phillips, chairman of the bureau, will preside.

The Forty and Eight Society of the American Legion will hold a meeting tomorrow evening at Hurshey's, King and Royal streets, with a special program planned for the entertainment committee. Col. Emory, of Fort Hunt, will be the speaker and the musical talent includes Lawrence Roland, Miss Marjorie Sinclair and Miss Virginia Nugent.

Potomac Lodge, No. 238, Odd Fellows, will hold a special meeting Friday evening, with an entertainment of unusual interest. This lodge will confer the first degree of the order on a class of candidates at Warrenton, Va., October 9, in connection with the annual meeting of the Northern Virginia Odd Fellows Association, to be held at that time.

The woman's missionary society of the Baptist Temple will observe a day of prayer for State missions Thursday at 10:30 a. m., with luncheon at 1 o'clock and the meeting will be resumed at 2 o'clock for the afternoon session.

Man Fatally Hurt In Maryland Crash

Son, Who Was Driving Car, Takes Body Back to Massachusetts.

Special to The Washington Post.

Frostburg, Md., Sept. 22.—Dying at Miners Hospital here a short time after he was injured in an automobile accident on the National highway 2 miles west of Frostburg early last night, the body of Elihu Lyle, 84, was taken to his home t Waltham, Mass., tonight by his son, Fred W. Lyle, who is cited to appear in people's court here next Monday.

It appears that a truck and a passenger automobile moving east to Frostburg were on the road. The drivers contend that young Lyle attempted to pass between them on the highway. Apparently the hubs of the truck and the Lyle machine sideswiped. The elder Lyle was thrown out, lacerated by the broken windshield and rendered unconscious. A deep gash was cut in the head. He never rallied.

Infant Hurt by Train Expected to Recover

Cumberland, Md., Sept. 22.—Notwithstanding 100 cars of a Baltimore & Ohio freight train passed over him, the fact that William Gracie Hutt, 2½-year-old son of George Hutt, of Seymour, is expected to recover at Memorial Hospital here. Struck by the train he has two fractures of the skull. The child, as was his habit, was going to the Potomac River bank to meet his father, who crosses daily in a boat from the plant of the Celanese Corporation of America, where he is employed.

The child was asleep and was awakened by the noon whistle of the plant. Probably thinking it was the evening whistle he started to the river bank with his toy wagon. He was found some time later and brought to the hospital here.

BETTER TARIFF PROSPECTS.

There has been sufficient debate in the Senate to define the scope of opposition to the bill. Those who are opposed to the principle of protection are hard pressed to make effective opposition without running afoul of their own party platforms. Both the Republicans and Democratic parties are now committed to the protective principle. Democrats who do not like this change in their party's attitude are nevertheless reluctant to come right out and oppose the protective principle, because they know it is the fixed economic policy of the United States and that no political party can stand against it.

Thus the opponents of protection have difficulty in making an effective fight against the tariff bill. They are forced to resort to criticism of details. As for those who sought to confine tariff revision to schedules solely pertaining to agriculture, they have been beaten to a standstill by the facts that have developed. There is no longer any danger that a considerable bloc in the Senate will succeed in arraying industry against agriculture. Senators who were bent upon driving sectional and class wedges into the United States have heard from their constituents. That attempt has been denounced from one end of the country to the other. The people by their vote for Hoover indicated that they favored tariff revision in all cases where American industry was driven to the wall by excessive foreign competition. They did not single out agriculture as the sole beneficiary of tariff relief.

Southern Democratic senators are preparing to vote for the protection of industries in their States. In doing so they are both politically and economically right. The Democratic party in the South has abandoned the old idea the country would prosper best if consumers were left free to buy cheap foreign goods rather than American goods produced by highly paid workers. The South is full of workers who are dependent upon tariff protection for their employment. All these men are consumers also, but they have discovered that before they can consume much they must have the wherewithal that comes in the pay check. They ask for protection as producers; they will protect themselves as consumers.

Senator Watson told the Senate that President Hoover, in his opinion, would not concern himself with the course of the tariff bill in Congress. Mr. Hoover decided at the beginning that he would not attempt to influence senators in behalf of any increase or decrease of duties. Although vigorous efforts have been made by various interests to induce him to intervene, he has refused to interest himself in legislation. This is not only a proper course to pursue, but it is highly judicious. The bill is subject to all sorts of changes, and no one knows what it will be when it goes to conference. The President evidently intends to avoid committing himself as to details. All the world knows how he stands as to principles. He wants tariff revision wherever it is needed by agriculture or industry, and he has never said or done anything that would give warrant for the assumption that he wishes to favor agriculture at the expense of industry.

The prospect for sensible tariff legislation is improving, thanks to the steadfastness of regular Republicans and the intelligence of Democrats who refuse to be bound by ancient shibboleths. The country is anxious to see prosperity made permanent, in the South as well as in the East and West. Adequate protection will insure this prosperity so far as the Government is concerned. The people will do the rest for themselves.

SENATOR HOWELL'S CHARGES.

President Hoover, in a formal statement issued yesterday, challenges vigorously the imputation of Senator Howell that Washington is not as dry as it might be because of official laxity in enforcement of the law. "The President," says the statement, "is glad the senator has raised the question. He is confident that the senator would not make these charges unless they were based upon definite facts, with time and place. If he will lay any such information before the Department of Justice, the President will have the matters vigorously investigated, for it is the intention not only to secure the fullest enforcement in the District possible under the organization of enforcement agencies as provided by law, but to make it a model for the country. Moreover, it is only fair to give to the District officials an opportunity to meet such charges."

Senator Howell, on Saturday, had told the Senate that the reason violation of the liquor law in the District had not been stopped was that "there was not the will to stop it." The President, he said, has absolute authority over District officials and he should remove those who demonstrate their incapability of enforcing the law. Yesterday, following the White House statement, Senator Howell amplified and tempered his remarks. While he stands behind his earlier assertion, he said, he had not charged neglect of duty on the part of any official and he has no specific knowledge, or "first hand information," of bootlegging. He does have knowledge of the importation of embassy liquor, which, in his opinion, is contraband, and he declares that if he was in absolute control of the District, as the President is, he would stop bootlegging simply by holding all officials responsible for enforcing the law.

Since it would be so easy to stop bootlegging, it is a pity that Senator Howell can not be given absolute authority over the District, and since he might have trouble finding men more anxious to perform their duties to the limit of their ability than the present officials of the District, it is a pity that he could not at the same time be police commissioner, superintendent of police, district attorney and prohibition agent. Senator Howell's charges, as amplified and tempered, simmer down to practically nothing except that embassies and legations have not generally chosen to become dry. The diplomatic right to import and serve liquor is not subject to challenge.

HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE.

"The person with a high blood-pressure should not allow himself to become a 'high blood pressure fiend,' constantly talking, thinking and living his high blood pressure," says a bulletin of the Public Health Service. Blood pressure is a very necessary function of the human mechanism, and the degree of that pressure is dependent upon various causes. "Some families noted for their longevity constitute a group having especially good arteries," says the bulletin. "Other family groups are unfortunate enough to inherit and transmit poor arteries, that is, arteries which have too little elastic tissue in them." As age advances the arteries thicken, with consequent pressure of the blood upon the walls, and persons who have the most elastic arteries have the best chance for old age.

It is found that sometimes "a certain amount of increased pressure is necessary, and in this there is ground for optimism; but there are limits beyond which the rise may become dangerous in itself." However, as a general rule the Public Health Service says that if the pressure can be kept below 200 the individual is "relatively safe from developments due directly to high blood pressure."

The treatment recommended to those whose blood is pressing at a rate approaching the danger point is a simple one of regimen and rest. The amount of exercise should be decided upon by the family physician. Don't overindulge an appetite by eating too much; restriction in amount rather than quality is of importance. But above all the sufferer, and he who thinks his pressure is too high, "should adopt a cheerful frame of mind, shun too frequent estimations of the pressure, avoid physical and mental, and especially emotional, excesses and get plenty of rest, and he may live with his pressure to a ripe old age."

THE DUTY ON HIDES.

The United States Leather Co. has come out in favor of free hides. That is nothing new, for it was largely through the appeals of this company, or some of the subcompanies which were absorbed when that corporation was formed, that the framers of the tariff act of 1922 refused to place a duty on cattle hides, notwithstanding the appeal of the cattle men of the West.

Every time the tariff has been discussed in the committee on ways and means in the House, or in the finance committee of the Senate, during the last 20 years, there has appeared before one or both of those committees representatives of the National Live Stock Association, the Texas and Southwestern Cattlemen's Association, and representatives of farmers and feeders in all the prairie and Mountain States, urging that a duty be placed upon hides. It is to be assumed that these interests were of the opinion that such a tariff would help them to some extent at least in the markets of Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha and Sioux City. But it is now announced that these farmers and stock-raisers were working against their own interests. The president of the United States Leather Co. has discovered this, and perhaps he is in time to prevent the consummation of the schemes of the packers, for he finds that the packers will be the only beneficiaries of the proposed tariff.

It is strange that the stockmen should have been led into this trap. They are looked upon as rather shrewd people who are quite able to understand the effects of any proposal that has a bearing upon their interests. But possibly they never thought of the effect which a duty of 10 per cent upon "dry salted" hides from Argentina or "pickled wet" hides from Mexico would have upon the cost of their boots. The president of the leather concern points this out very clearly in a letter sent to each member of the Senate and House. But as the tariff bill increases the rate of duty on cattle with their hides on their backs, it is difficult to understand how "the careful study" which the writer solicits for his letter will bring about a change in the minds of the framers of the tariff bill.

DIAMOND SMUGGLING.

Once again Treasury agents arrest a seaman and a resident of New York City on charges of diamond smuggling. Stones valued at $12,000 were confiscated on the person of the seaman and it is announced that another smuggling ring has been broken. A dozen times, more or less, in the past few years it has been announced that giant diamond smuggling rings have been broken, but stones of great aggregate value continue to find their way to market at the expense of the Government, where they offer unfair competition to stones honestly imported. It is no secret that diamond smuggling is big business and that the Government, despite the active antismuggling campaign it has been prosecuting, has failed to stamp out organized customs evasion.

What is to be done? The smuggling squad of the Treasury Department has worked indefatigably to apprehend smugglers, but for every person convicted another has appeared, lured by the promise of quick and easy profits. Diamonds are easily concealed. They are heavily taxed. There is reason to believe that no matter how vigilant the authorities may be, attempts always will be made to smuggle diamonds. The Jewelers Protective Association, however, has suggested a remedy. Reduce the duty on diamonds, it says, and smuggling not only will disappear but customs collections will increase.

The House, in its tariff bill, accepted the proposal of the association reducing the rate on both cut and uncut stones. The matter now awaits Senate action. It seems highly improbable, somehow, that an individual who is willing to defraud the Government will be made honest by reducing the duty he will have to pay. Will a thief pay duty when he can continue his smuggling?

The Wisconsin Legislature resigns after a nine-month session, allowing the people of Wisconsin just three months to discover what new laws they must violate.

China, it is estimated, has 1,000,000 lepers, but the United States has 100,000,000 leapers.

BE A FAN

By A. A. BRILL, M. D.,
In the North American Review.

Vigorous physical activity is by no means an invariably sound prescription for the man whose normal occupation is sedentary or inactive, and indeed it may be distinctly dangerous. Besides, no matter how much the doctrinaires may urge him, the average man, for perfectly simple psychological reasons, just will not muster much enthusiasm for the idea of getting out and playing instead of watching the game. On the other hand, through the operation of the psychological laws of identification and catharsis, the thorough-going fan is distinctly benefited mentally, physically and morally by spectator-participation in his favorite sport. And his wife might find him a much less pleasant animal to have around the house, when he was there, if he did not absent himself from time to time to let off the accumulated steam of ancient instincts.

To understand the psychology of the fan, let us first examine the origin and reason for athletic games—for all games, in fact, since bridge and chess and parchesi spring from the same root as baseball, football, tennis and boxing. That root is what psychoanalysis calls the "aggressive component," which in turn is an active expression of the "mastery impulse." Every human being, every animal indeed, is born with this mastery impulse and this aggressive component because they are the primary weapons in the fight for survival. For great numbers of the human family the conditions of life have relaxed so that the reality of the struggle has almost been lost sight of; but the old instincts are there, ready to be called upon in time of need. Meanwhile this primary instinct—the aggressive component—must have exercise. For this purpose man has invented games, which are simply artificial struggles, contests, sometimes artificial dangers. Our national habit of watching rather than playing games, despite all the head-shaking of physical culturists and economists, sociologists and intellectuals, is a salutary habit. The life of man in America or in any of the industrialized countries today, laboring on the farm, in the factory, in the office, is not the natural life of man. He is still an animal formed for battle and conquest, for blows and strokes and swiftness, for triumph and applause. The need of these things can not be satisfied, for the vast majority, by participation in games, because only a few can triumph and surpass; and those whose lot is mediocrity will not persist, no matter how much they may be exhorted. Here psychological instinct joins hands with hygienic instinct, and prevents men who are past the physically exuberant years of youth from indulging in violent exercise, which, in most cases, would merely be harmful. The man who sits quietly in an office chair or stands passively at a machine all week does himself no good if on the seventh day he suddenly calls upon muscles, lungs, heart and nerves to exert themselves suddenly and violently. But let him join the crowd around the diamond, the gridiron, the tennis court or the ring, and watch the college boys who are not yet chained to the social-industrial machine, or some of the small class of professional athletes, play out the games which mimic the stern and dangerous contests of primitive times. Let him identify himself with his favorite fighter, player or team. He will purge himself of impulses which, too much dammed up would lead to private broils and public disorders. He will achieve exaltation, vicarious but real. He will be a better individual, a better citizen, a better husband and father.

AN OLD FRENCH CUSTOM.

On Monday I bought share on share.
On Tuesday I was a millionaire;
On Wednesday I took a grand abode;
On Thursday in my carriage rode;
On Friday went to the opera ball;
On Saturday came to the pauper's hall.

Now, when do you suppose that was written? Save for a little quaintness in the language, it might have been turned out last March, says John T. Flynn in the American Magazine. As a matter of fact, it was written 200 years ago. From which we may see that the contagious disease called speculation is not by any means a modern infection.

When that bit of verse was penned, the notorious Mississippi Bubble had broken in France and the frenzied stock buyers were rushing madly into a little lane in Paris called Quincampoix street, where the stock sharpers carried on their trade in the open air. The municipal authorities, in order to check this crazed speculation, boarded up the street to keep the foolish victims out.

TRUTH SEEKING.

"I want to know the truth," he cried.
"To face the facts I will be brave.
From knowledge I'll not run to hide.
To fancy I'll not be a slave.
Nor will I say a thing is so
Unless I absolutely know.

"That two and two make four," said he.
"I know is true beyond a doubt,
On that with none I'll disagree,
It has been often tested out."
"But 'two and two,'" said I, "is not
The only way that 'four' is got.

"This 'four' you call the absolute
Can still in other ways be made.
Who can in fractions small compute
Can find preciseness to a shade.
And 'three and one' will give to you
As true a 'four' as 'two and two.'

"In spite of all the doctrines preached,
In spite of all our endless pains,
The goal of truth however reached,
Unaltered and unchanged remains.
And there are twenty ways or more
By which a man can come to 'four.'"

Old Skin Bottles, No Longer Elastic, Are Unfit for the New-Crop Wine.

By ROBERT QUILLEN

DECAY begins when growth ends. That is the law of nature.

It is obvious, then, that the way to postpone the process of decay is to prolong the process of growth.

There is little you can do to arrest the decay of your body, but you can postpone old age by prolonging the mind's period of development.

The affliction we call old age isn't a matter of physical weakness and pain. Some unfortunates yet in their teens have bodies more sadly bent and broken than Time alone ever breaks one. It is the condition and state of mind that reveal age and make it tragic.

Age has done its worst at 20 if the mind stops growing then; age has done little harm at 60 if the mind still adjusts itself to new things and new ideas.

Twenty years ago, minds too old and hardened to accept new ideas were horrified by women who fought for emancipation.

They condemned the first woman who appeared in skirts six inches above the dust and grime of the street. "Brazen," they said; "immoral, ugly, offensive."

They were similarly outraged when feminine tennis players appeared without sleeves; when the corset was discarded; when hair was bobbed; when skirts were shortened to the knee.

Each time they were offended by newness; each time they saw the race survive unhurt when newness had become commonplace; yet each new innovation found them still opposed to newness, and today they are alarmed by unstockinged legs as once they were alarmed by short hair.

Your opinion of bare feminine legs doesn't matter. It will avail nothing. Woman is like the wind, that bloweth where it listeth. You may argue, if you will, that silk-clad legs are prettier than bare ones; but tight garters are uncomfortable and bareness is cool. The dears have common sense to support them. They will do as they please. No matter.

What does matter to you is your attitude of mind. Habitually oppose new things and your mind will jell. You will grow old while your body is in its prime.

Learn to accept and in spirit become a part of every new thing decreed by progress and common sense, and at 80 you may retain the fresh, keen mind of a youngster.

You can tell a dead stick by the fact that it won't bend.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

Streets Should Be Designated for Use of Persons Learning to Drive Automobile.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Until the new traffic code was adopted any one could undertake to teach another to drive an automobile. Learners had only to be accompanied by a licensed driver, and there was no provision for temporary learners' licenses. The new code marked a definite step forward for the protection of those learning to drive and the general public. It provided for learners' licenses of 30 days' duration and made it mandatory that a learner be accompanied by a licensed teacher.

Police Commissioner Whalen, of New York City, now plans to set aside certain wide streets, conveniently located and reasonably free from vehicular traffic, to be used as practice streets by those learning to drive. The public would not be barred from such streets, but signs would be posted giving notice that the street was being used by novices. Learners would be permitted to use no other streets.

Learners' streets might well be set aside in Washington. The Traffic Bureau is situated on the edge of the congested zone, and novices frequently essay to drive to it for their examination through crowded thoroughfares. Their safety and that of the public would be better guarded if they were forced to use the less-heavily traveled approaches to the bureau and if they were barred at all times from practicing on any except certain streets devoted to the purpose. ROSS WATKINS.

New Uses of Airplanes Show That They Will Become a Necessity of Life.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The day is coming when the airplane will be a necessity in every-day affairs. During the war planes were used as eyes for the artillery, but the time is gradually approaching when they will be used not as eyes for the artillery alone but as eyes for the world. The trips to both poles of the globe demonstrated this to a great extent; then, too, forest patrols on the lookout for fires shows the necessity of planes today.

In Germany planes are used for the purpose of locating schools of fish, while archeologists employ planes in their searches for hidden treasures. A plane was used the other day for the purpose of apprehending a criminal who made a living by blackmailing. This blackmailer employed a carrier pigeon to bring back the swag. When the pigeon was released to carry the money to its owner, an airplane was used by the police to follow the bird. The plane proved successful in the unique attempt, and the criminal was located when the pilot of the plane saw the pigeon alight on its home loft. E. U. S.

Smoking in Elevators Both Offensive and Dangerous.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In several of the large office buildings in Washington there is dangerous smoking in elevators. The other day I felt a stinging pain in my arm and upon looking down I found that a cigarette had been pressed against my arm. It burnt a hole in the sleeve of my dress and also the flesh of my arm.

I think it would be a very good idea to have a receptacle in front of every elevator into which cigarettes can be thrown by those who are about to board it. There should also be signs in each elevator stating that no smoking is allowed. It is an insult to blow smoke in one's face, and now I know that smoking is dangerous also. S. P. C.

The United States of Europe.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In 1923 I wrote a series of letters (some seven or eight) in which I advocated a "United States of Europe" as a means of assuring peace, and which were published in Paris by the European edition of the Chicago Tribune. There were several letters published in reply, one of them signed with the name of a well-known member of the House of Representatives at Washington.

I am not claiming to have originated this proposal. It is so simple and reasonable that it must have suggested itself to very many people. Now that it is advocated by the three leading statesmen of three great nations, it may, eventually, be carried through. BERTRAND SHADWELL.

High Taxes Drive People Out of the District.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Thank you for your article on the increase in water taxation for the District. Taxation for the District should be kept down, as high taxes drive people out of the District. J. P. M'CRINK.

WHAT WOULD HE SAY NOW?

Just about a hundred years ago the German pessimistic philosopher, Schopenhauer, wrote an essay on noises, the chief of which was the cracking of whips, says the Milwaukee Journal. He wrote:

"Every time this noise is made it must disturb a hundred people who are applying their minds to business of some sort, no matter how trivial it may be; while on the thinker its effect is woeful and disastrous, cutting his thoughts asunder, much as the executioner's ax severs the head from the body. No sound, be it ever so shrill, cuts so sharply into the brain as this cursed cracking of whips; you feel the sting of the lash right inside your head and it affects the brain in the same way as touch affects a sensitive plant and for the same length of time.

"With all due respect for the most holy doctrine of utility, I really can not see why a fellow who is taking a wagon load of gravel or dung should thereby obtain the right to kill in the bud the thoughts which may happen to be springing up in 10,000 heads—the number he will disturb one after another in half an hour's drive through the town."

EVENTS OF INTEREST IN SOCIETY CIRCLES OF CAPITAL

Social Crisis Over Visit of Premier Fades

By JEAN ELIOT.

THE United States never has gone to war with a foreign nation over questions arising out of the visit of a foreign dignitary. Presumably it never will. Scores of princes and potentates and even an occasional ruling sovereign have been entertained with dignity, decorum and all the honors due their rank, although one might suppose from the discussion and to-do over the proposed visit of the Prime Minister of Great Britain that he was the first "distinguished visitor from overseas" to come to the Capital. And, if there was ever a "diplomatic incident" growing out of the official welcome extended by Uncle Sam, it was so far in the past as to be forgotten.

Admittedly, there are delicate questions involved in the status of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald and his daughter, who is his official hostess, complicated by our much advertised questions of precedence in our own official group. But there is every reason to suppose that all difficulties will be ironed out by the proper authorities and that there will be nothing untoward to mar the Prime Minister's stay.

In this connection it is interesting to be reminded that crises of official etiquette occur even at the Court of St. James, where procedure is governed by a protocol and where the order of precedence is established by law. In "George Harvey, Journalist and Ambassador," which has been running in The Saturday Evening Post, a long letter of Col. Harvey's to the late Mrs. Harding, illuminating and amusing, deals with the excitement at the British court over what should be the order of dress for ambassadors and others, not expected to wear uniform, for the wedding of Princess Mary and Viscount Lascelles. It was not decided until the court chamberlain—or whoever is the "properly constituted authority"—has discussed the matter pro and con with the American Ambassador and had been given a tip as to what Col. Harvey himself would prefer to wear.

Again, when Chief Justice Taft visited Great Britain to make a study of British legal procedure, with a view to introducing some reforms in American courts, there was much official discussion, with both British and American big-wigs involved, as to what was the proper dress for the Chief Justice to wear when he was received at the Court of St. James. The cables were kept hot with the discussion, Chief Justice Taft standing out against breeches and hose on the plea that London could not supply "stockings big enough for his jewel posts." Eventually it was decided that his judicial robes would be the dignified and most distinguished garb.

Another question was involved in connection with Chief Justice and Mrs. Taft's London visit, and the sovereign himself took a hand in its settlement by bringing it to the attention of the American Ambassador and the proper court officials, with the suggestion that together they work out a solution. The Chief Justice was not only the presiding officer of the highest tribunal in the United States, but he was a former President of the Republic, and King George was most anxious that in this capacity he be accorded every honor.

After some consultation the powers that be agreed that a former President should be received as a former sovereign would have been. This meant that, instead of being received with the other guests at the court, Chief Justice and Mrs. Taft were given a private audience with their majesties a half hour before the ceremonies began, went to the throne room with their suite, and were given chairs on the dais at the right hand of the sovereigns.

Music on Air Tonight Has Vienna Tang

Austrian City Is Source of Program Over Network of NBC; Listeners Also to Be Taken Over Lindbergh Air Trail.

Several of the programs to be heard tonight over the National Broadcasting Co. network will originate in the crystal studios located in Madison Square Garden, the scene of New York's radio show.

Vienna, which from the days of Haydn and Beethoven to the modern times of Richard Strauss and Fritz Kreisler has been called the world capital of music, is the source whence will be drawn the program of the General Motors Family Party presented by Frank Black's Orchestra and Lewis James, tenor. All the music for this hour comes from Viennese inspiration and reflects the varying moods of that city of Central Europe as well as its long musical history. The program follows:

Overture to "Die Fledermaus," (Strauss); "Caprice Viennois" (Kreisler); "Serenade" (Schubert), tenor; Entr'Acte II from "Rosamunde" (Schubert); excerpts from "The Riviera Girl" (Kalman), vocal interludes; "Gigolette" (Lehar); "Play Gypsies, Dance Gypsies" (Kalman); "The Blue Danube," (Strauss); and "Marche Militaire" (Schubert).

Radio listeners will be taken over the Lindbergh air trail through the Caribbean by Floyd Gibbons, noted war correspondent and author, in his broadcast talk at 9:30 o'clock. "Air Yachting in the Caribbean" will be the title of the "headline hunter's" talk. It will be based on Gibbons' own experience on a 4,000-mile air tour of the West Indies and islands in the Carribean last January. His flight took him over Cuba, Porto Rico, Haiti, Santo Domingo, Jamaica and the Virgin Islands.

The Voice of Firestone will be expressed by Vaughn de Leath, contralto; Franklyn Baur, tenor, and Hugo Mariani's Orchestra when they broadcast at 7 o'clock. Program details are:

"La Pere de la Victoire" (Ganne), tenor; "Gentle Annie" (Foster), and "Juba Dance" (Dett), orchestra; "Do What You Do" from "Show Girl," contralto; "The Lost Chord" (Sullivan), tenor; "All Through the Night," contralto; "Sweetheart," orchestra; "A Rose for Every Heart" (Cadman), tenor; "Little Boy Blue" (Nevin), and "Mississippi" from "Show Girl."

The Gypsies will be heard during the hour beginning at 7:30 o'clock. William Hard will present his regular Monday evening political discussion of what is "Back of the News in Washington" at 6:45 o'clock.

The Columbia Broadcasting System will offer a program for the opening of the rado show at 6:30 o'clock, via WMAL. Paul Ash will be the master of ceremonies, presenting Paul Small, ballad singer, and Irene Taylor, in a group of special blues numbers. They will be followed by Nino Martini, Italian opera tenor, and George Dewey Washington, baritone. Kuznezoff and Nicolini, a gypsy act, will close the program.

The inaugural program celebrating the opening of the new studios of Stations WKBW, WGR, WMAK and WKEN, operated by the Buffalo Broadcasting Corporation, will be heard over the Columbia System at 9:30 o'clock.

Featured on the program are a 30-piece symphony orchestra under the direction of Herbert Straub, musical director for the stations, and Ivan Ivantzoff, barytone. During this program Mr. Ivantzoff will sing the "Toreador Song" from "Carmen," Massenet's "Vision Fugitif," "Eri Tu" from Verdi's "Bal Masque," and Gretchaninoff's "Steppe."

Frances Fallon, contralto, will be heard for the first time this evening from WOL. She will sing "Lassie o' Mine," by Walt; "Carmena," by Wilson, and "Hallowed Hour," by Hayden Wood. Mrs. Bernard L. Douglas will accompany Miss Fallon.

Horton McLennon will give a musical saw recital from the studios at 6 o'clock.

A program will be broadcast for Commander Byrd over WJZ and KDKA's short-wave transmitter at 8 o'clock from the Crystal studio in Madison Square Garden.

What Today Means to You

"VIRGO."

If September 23 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 9 a. m. to 11 a. m. and from 5 p. m. to 7:30 p. m. The danger periods are from noon to 2 p. m. and from 9 p. m. to 10:30 p. m.

Furtive influences are augured for this date. Evil surrounds you, although it will be cleverly camouflaged. Watch for deception from a woman in whom you have placed much confidence. Health conditions are favorable.

The child born on this September 23 will be kind-hearted, constant and winsome, but secretive. Once a friend, it will be a friend for all time. It is destined to become a leader in all its activities. It will merit success.

You possess many of the qualities which distinguish a successful man or woman. You not only have perseverance, but "grit." You are not afraid to tackle anything, knowing full well that you have a hard and bitter fight ahead of you. You possess "thrust," and work toward a definite object. Fortunately, you are not self-centered or self-satisfied; you are not harnessed to custom or tradition, and you are always on the alert for new ideas and are seeking better ways of doing things.

Opportunities lie thickly around us all, but few recognize them as quickly as you do. You are looking for them anywhere and everywhere—you strike the iron while it is hot. You study your job, you know your work, be it big or little, important or superficial. Whatever you do, you do well. Neither mood, time nor circumstance can make you slight corners. You are doubtless known as a "particular" or fussy being. The little details that lend attractiveness and charm mean so much to you.

You are psychic and have unusual presentments, but you are so strongly endowed with the desire to reason out everything that your love of exact proof usually overwhelms your psychic power. You should, however, heed your "hunches."

Successful people born September 23:

John England, R. C. clergyman.

Sara Jane (Clarke) Lippincott, author.

Jonathan Scott Hartley, sculptor.

Hjalmar H. Boyeson, professor of German literature.

James Carroll Beckwith, artist.

I. THE LAND OF MONKS.

NORTH of India is a strange country called Tibet.

Tibet is land of high plateaus and mountains. In area it is about equal to France, Germany and Spain combined.

If you were to visit Tibet, you would be astonished by the great number of monks. About half of all the men in the country are members of Buddhist monasteries! The native name for "monk" is "lama," and the chief ruler of the country is called the "dalai lama."

The dalai lama is chosen for life. Sometimes he is given the office when only 2 or 3 years old, but while he is growing up a regent takes charge of affairs.

The monks of Tibet are not allowed to marry. They live together in large homes. As many as 10,000 monks may live in a single monastery.

It is a poor country. The soil is not very good for crops and the people have trouble in obtaining food. There are stretches of pasture land, however, and large numbers of sheep are kept. The wool from the sheep is woven into cloth and the cloth is used in trade with other countries.

There is a curious beast called the "yak" which is fairly common in Tibet. I plan to write a story about this animal at a later time. Yak milk is used for making butter as well as for drinking.

China has laid claim to Tibet, but the people of the country claim that they are free of foreign rule. They are related to the Chinese, but are different in several ways.

New York's Radio Show Is on Today

Rumors of Television Sets, Low in Price, Within Six Months, Provide Grounds for Eager Anticipation of Fair.

Radio Show Highlights

Expected attendance, 300,000.

Broadcasts during week from glass-inclosed studios in Madison Square Garden over WRC, WMAL and more than 100 stations by the NBC and Columbia chains with an expenditure of $300,000 for artists and wire tolls.

Radio receiving sets and apparatus valued at $1,000,000 on display.

First public demonstration to be made of television and movies broadcast by radio.

Exhibition showing how home of the future may have a speaker and a remote control device in every room.

"Radio Pageant of Progress," historic display, from crude Marconi apparatus of 30 years up to present transatlantic radio telephone equipment.

By ROBERT D. HEINL.

New York, Sept. 22.—With rumors that television receiving sets within the reach of the average man's pocketbook will be on the market in the next six months and that thereafter we may have movies as well as music and speeches projected directly into our homes, there is plenty of anticipation on the eve of the opening of what is expected to be the finest of all exhibitions of its kind—the sixth annual radio world's fair.

So great have been the strides in perfecting the receivers that it almost takes the breath of an old-time fan to contemplate the present-day magnificence. Formerly a radio set was some kind of an unpresentable box or metallic container with a lot of leaky batteries and wires attached to it, which the wife would hardly allow in the house. Today, as seen at the radio show, it is a beautiful piece of furniture, which compares favorably with anything in the home.

Harding Party Remembered.

Just as great has been its development mechanically. It seems only yesterday that an earnest little group was gathered together in Washington to witness a demonstration of a radio set for President Harding. Like most everybody else at that time the President was more or less familiar with ship wireless, but had not heard a program or voice broadcast. In order that he might thoroughly understand the marvelous mechanism of a receiving set, an expert was sent all the way from Pittsburgh to explain it to him.

Explain he did, at length and in great technical detail, but to his embarrassment, when he turned the set on all that greeted the President of the United States was a fine bunch of static. After a few splutters the machine went out of commission altogether and not a sound was produced until later when everybody had given up hope, a voice came booming from the loud speaker, which was heard to say, "I can't make the damned thing work."

Fine Reproductions Now.

In those days—as it was for some years thereafter—to be able to tune in a station when one wanted to show off a set was almost an act of Providence, and equally as great has been the development of the radio as a musical instrument. Formerly, with the tin-panny sounds it emitted, it was but a feeble carbon copy of the poorest phonograph.

It is safe to say with the marvelous development of the speakers that there are sets on display at the New York radio show which are able to reproduce the music of orchestras and instruments with such fidelity and so naturally that even a great musician like Walter Damrosch at some distance away doubtless wouldn't be able to tell whether it was his own orchestra playing or a radio or phonographic reproduction.

Since it would obviously be impossible to turn all the sets on at once for demonstration purposes in the exhibition hall in Madison Square Garden, fans will have an opportunity to listen to the new machines actually in operation in hotels in the Times Square district, where rooms will be provided for actual demonstrations of the 1929-1930 receivers employing screen grid tubes and other late refinements.

Television to Be Demonstrated.

Television images, combined with the voices of performers as they appear and speak before the eye of the electrical camera, representing the latest development of research laboratories in this line, are to be exhibited at the radio show.

Visitors will see the images of the actors on a screen about a foot square, while a loud speaker reproduces the voices. The players will give the presentations at a remote point, invisible to the audience, which will sit in a sound-television theater now being completed at the Garden by the General Electric Co.

It is also expected that remote control tuning will attract the crowds. A small control box, placed on the arm of a chair or in another room of the home, away from the set, but linked to the tuning mechanism by a cable, permits the operator to shift from station to station without going directly to the receiving set to change it each time.

The radio show will continue all week.

Dare INTERPRETS the MODE

"Toute Simple" is exactly it. A grey woolen fabric trimmed with stitching and cuffs and belt of gray kid. (Courtesy of the Maison Mag-Helly, Paris.)

WE'LL probably be telling you a good bit about hats for a while, for, as we have often told you, the hat showings always come first each season. But inasmuch as the modistes must harmonize with the dresses the couturiers are to bring out a few weeks later, a considerable degree of collaboration has grown up between the two—and thus if you know your little book of fashions, the first notes on hats will give you valuable clues as to what is to follow in other lines of the mode.

So today we shall just describe for you a few models at random.

First, there was a smart little hat of pink felt, fitted closely, long in the back and cut high in an inverted "V" on the forehead, trimmed with graceful, curving rows of lace and braided rose velvet. This was by Le Monnier.

• • • •

Then a stunning black taffeta hat from Esther Meyer, which has a plain crown but a swooping, down-turning brim of feather lace, very open, short in the front but coming low on the sides and back, with a little sort of "visor" in the front. A taffeta bow finished this off to perfection.

Mme. Agnes is responsible for a large black felt capeline, which has a brim of felt in front, but is incrusted in the back with caracul fur, cleverly cut and draped, in an adorable effect.

Jane Blanchot shows a smart little hat of black felt, in which the brim in front comes down to form a little curlicue over one ear and a long loop over the other. A brilliant black enamel ornament of modernistic design gives accent to the whole.

• • • •

Our Diet Breakfast.

One medium sized orange, or one medium sized apple, or half a small grapefruit, or any fruit cooked without sugar; one egg boiled or poached; tea or coffee with one teaspoonful of cream. Watch tomorrow!

• • • •

It couldn't be any more simple—nor any less. And yet it manages to look distinctly Parisian, this gray woolen dress we sketched for you today. It is trimmed simply with stitching and a touch, ever so delicate, of light green crepe de chine in the skirt pleats! And, to be sure, gray kid cuffs matches the belt.

One hears more and more of the Maison Mag-Helly. Frocks like this furnish the reason!

• • • •

A mandarin coat is so simple to make and so useful—hadn't you better send your stamped self-addressed envelope to the Dare Department of The Washington Post for the illustrated leaflet, which tells you exactly how to make this most charming and useful garments?

For a negligee, a tea-gown, an evening coat, for summer or winter, depending upon the weight of the material and the interlining.

• • • •

Huge cravats of white ermine are so foten used on black broadcloth coats! And the dress underneath more often than not has lingerie touches on the collar, sometimes over a filet of ecru lace.

• • • •

Coin de Couleur.

The vogue of brown is an established fact for the winter. Also reddish shades of it, like cocoa and maroon, are often seen.

Rust is the shade of red that will doubtless be chosen by smart women for day wear. It is particularly flattering to Titan and auburn types and brunettes, but in general should not be affected by blondes.

• • • •

You're not overlooking, we hope, the weekly Dare fashion letter in The Washington Post each Sunday.

WORK ON BRIDGE

Bridge Brevities, a pamphlet by Milton C. Work, the world's pre-eminent authority on Auction and Contract Bridge, free.

This valuable pamphlet, containing concise suggestions for players of both games, will be sent with the compliments of this paper to readers of Mr. Work's articles who request it.

Requests must be addressed to Milton C. Work, care of this paper, and must include a stamped (2c stamp) self-addressed return envelope.

Read Mr. Work's articles on Auction and Contract. Every day exclusively in The Washington Post.

(This article is intended for the Auction Bridge novice.)

So much has been said about the necessity of holding two quick tricks in order to justify an original bid, that inexperienced players are apt to infer that two quick tricks justify a bid in every case; but such an inference may be unsound. Quick tricks are not the proper measure for no trumpers; and other features besides quick tricks are essential for suit-bids.

I recently saw the following hand in print coupled with the statement that it was strong enough for an original No Trump bid because it had three suits stopped and two quick tricks:

♠A-X-X
♥A-X-X
♦J-10-X-X
♣X-X-X
853

As a matter of fact the hand does not justify a bid of spy kind, which shows the fallacy of considering quick tricks when determining whether to bid a No Trump.

The simplest and soundest method of sizing up a hand for a No Trump bid is to find out what it "counts." Reckon each Ace as 4, each King as 3, each Queen as 2 and each Jack as 1. Two Tens count 1; single Tens are not counted. To be an acceptable No trumper, a hand must have a certain minimum count; must have at least three suits stopped; and must not contain a blank suit nor a singleton other than Ace or King.

An Auction Bridge dealer, or second hand after dealer's pass, should have a count of at least 12 to bid one No Trump; third hand after two passes needs a count of 14; fourth hand after three passes should not bid on a count of less than 16. The hand given above has three suits stopped and has no blank suit or singleton; but its count is only 9. It needs an additional King (count 3) to make it a bid for dealer; or a King and Queen (count 5) for third hand; or two Kings (count 6) for fourth hand. Of course, a Queen and Jack would be the equivalent of a King, an Ace and Jack would be equal a King and Queen, Ace and Queen or three Queens would equal two Kings, &c.

An expert player sometimes is justified by a count of 11 in bidding one No Trump in the dealer or second hand position, particularly the latter in which case the dealer has shown weakness by passing; but the novice will do well to stick to 12 as a minimum. Be cautious about fourth hand No Trumps; even with a count of 15 fourth hand had better bid out the deal than bid with a weak doubleton in either major suit.

When a hand with only three suits stopped offers a good major-suit bid it is foolish to bid No Trump no matter how high the count, bid the major instead.

HOW TO KEEP WELL

By DR. W. A. EVANS

To the limit of space, questions pertaining to hygiene and prevention of disease will be answered in this column. Personal replies will be made to inquiries, under proper limitations, when return stamped envelope is inclosed. Dr. Evans will not make diagnosis or prescribe for individual disease.

DRUGS AND CONSTIPATION.

CONSTIPATION is about the most prevalent of the minor ills. It is likely to remain so until people break their drug-taking habits. It is safe to say that nine-tenths of the drugs used do more harm than good, and the habit of running to the medicine chest leads all others in the harm it does.

In constipation, such habits as coffee drinking, tobacco smoking and even whisky drinking are rather unimportant. Of the many forms of medicine chest addiction, the habit of using purgative pills, waters and salts lead the rest. A study of several thousand cases of constipation was made by Dr. J. L. Kantor. About half of them were cases of simple bad habits. Many were due to eating too much rather dry food. All they needed to do for a cure was to drink one or more glasses of water, cold or warm, on getting up in the morning.

Some had habits of constipation which resulted from a lack of orderliness. They ate at irregular hours, in irregular quantities, and neglected calls of nature and were generally lacking in regularity. Care of this group called for nothing more than the adoption of an orderly system.

Some people were constipated because they were undernourished, or were starving themselves, or were reducing. Such cases were relieved by giving them more food. Many were all right when they ate more olive oil, butter or other fats.

Above all was it necessary that a person with the constipation habit should abandon the use of cathartics and never rely on them. New habits could not be established until the old ones were broken. Simple constipation called for a diet richer in bran bread, bran cereals and the grosser, bulkier vegetables. Agar, psyllium and flaxseed have an important place in this treatment. Milk, and especially sour milk, acidophilus milk and milk sugar are of great service. The old idea that milk is constipating is entirely without foundation.

There is a kind of constipation which calls for the opposite kind of dieting. It is that which is due to irritable colon or spastic colon. Mucous colitis belongs to this group. In irritable or spastic colon the diet should consist largely of meat of different kinds and of various kinds of fermented and soured milks. The breads used must be made from bolted flours. Coarse vegetables and fruits are to be used only when permission is given. In the treatment of mucous colitis the first step is to overcome the underlying constipation.

WATCH DIET AND EXERCISE.

Mrs. F. M. writes: I have a little girl of 4, weighing 48 pounds. She looks well, but has a very poor appetite most of the time, and when she does eat a good meal, likely as not, she will vomit up everything. She has been this way for a long time. She catches cold very easily and she is very feverish. She has circles under her eyes. She moans during and sometimes before going to sleep. Her bowels have always been regular.

REPLY.

To begin with, your child has a finicky appetite, which has probably resulted from faulty training. As a rule, such children should be given a proper diet and then set to eat it without any particular attention from the parent. Persuasion, coercion and attention generally are harmful to children with finicky appetites. In addition, there is a chance that your child has acidosis frequently. Keep her out in the open air. Have her lead an active life. Her diet should be rich in vegetables, fruit and milk and poor in fats, eggs, cereals and breads.

Wives of Tomorrow

By FRANCES M'DONALD

DEAD LOVE.

Why do humans cling so tenaciously to a dead love? Can anything be more dread than the love that is no more? Yet men and women cling and cloy and forfeit even the remnants of dignity—and in a hopeless cause. The answer to all who question whether there is hope when interest dies is that there is none.

No one can guarantee the life of a love, nor the duration of interest. Such things come and live a while and flutter out, quite as we come and pause a while and pass—whither? Perhaps the dead loves go to heaven or hover in the air as memories. Certainly it is a pity that we can not keep at least the memories as we would have them. Instead we must ruin all by trying to recapture a moment that has passed.

Allan is engaged in trying to recapture such a moment, and in doing so he is endangering the life of what still may be at times a passable memory. And that is a pity. For a woman likes to believe that a man in whom she has ever felt an interest was at least worthy of the interest. And dignity preserves that illusion. Allan is young, and youth hates to yield to the inevitable. But when one must yield, then at least yield with dignity and not on hands and knees.

"She cared," Allan writes. "It lasted six months. And now I do not even exist for her. I have done everything, tried everything. What can I do to regain her love? All I get out of her is the statement that it is just over and done with. Is that possible? Or is there anything that I can do?"

And the only thing that he can do is retire with dignity. Better that the girl remember him as a gentleman than as an awful cry-baby. Better that time even render him as a gallant gentleman who gallantly rode away than as an importunate somebody who made an unholy todo over nothing.

There is nothing so unbearable as the individual who lives in the past, who can not keep up with the pace of time or the procession of events. If something is, today, he expects it to be the same tomorrow. Life isn't like that. Things change. People change. All we can do is keep in step. Accept change as part of life, anguish as little as possible, and above all save a few shreds of dignity when somebody insists upon writing the word "finis."

Child Monographs Will Be Published

National Catholic School Plans to Print Series Written by Pupils.

A series of monographs, written by the students and dealing with child welfare and the measurement of home conditions, will be published this month by the National Catholic School of Social Service, which is opening its ninth academic year.

The Rev. Karl J. Alter, formerly director of Catholic Charities of Toledo, is the new head of the school, and it is announced that he will bring the school into cooperation with all the Washington agencies engaged in social service activities. The school was organized and is sponsored by the National Council of Catholic Women.

With the funds contributed by an anonymous benefactor, the officials of the school have just completed extensive improvements in the buildings and grounds. The whole interior of the school has been renovated.

Noted British Writer Recovers From Injury

Oakland, Calif., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Sir Gilbert Parker, noted British novelist, was recuperating here today at the home of his brother, A. G. Parker, from injuries suffered in an automobile accident near Carmel Highlands.

Sir Gilbert suffered a broken arm and numerous bruises yesterday. He was in an automobile driven by his sister-in-law, Mrs. Parker, when the machine left the road and turned over. Mrs. Parker escaped uninjured.

Lady Parker died in 1925, and for the last few months Sir Gilbert has been visiting in Oakland. Some anxiety for the novelist was felt because of his advanced age and poor health.

» » THE SAFE ROAD ALOFT!

Highly skilled weather observers along the entire route are transmitting their reports to your pilot. He knows exactly what to expect! . . . And, with three motors, can easily meet any weather emergency.

NOT UNTIL SAFETY was definitely assured could the great transportation companies risk carrying passengers across the sky. And safety could not be assured until three of the greatest hazards of flight were overcome. These were (1) engine failure, (2) structural defects, and (3) fire. War-time planes, and planes built on war-time principles,-could not overcome these hazards, because such planes were planned expressly for hazardous performances and risky maneuverability. A new type of plane, a commercial plane with safety as its chief factor, had to be developed before peace-time transportation could be assured.

After months and years of study, both in America and Europe, the Pennsylvania Railroad, in conjunction with the Santa Fe, realized that at last, in the multi-engined plane, safety with comfort could be assured!

New York to Los Angeles—48 hours

On July 7th, with more than a thousand applications for passage in hand, the T-A-T air-rail service was inaugurated across this country. Now, as you are reading this message, the giant, all-metal tri-motored planes of the Transcontinental Air Transport are driving across the sky smoothly, luxuriously, SAFELY . . . at over a hundred miles an hour! This is the birth of a new service that will continue through the ages; for with the development of the metal plane air-transportation is at last an established fact.

You are accustomed to marvels in this industrial age. But do you fully comprehend the simple fact of this new air-transportation service? Do you understand that taking passage from New York to Los Angeles or San Francisco, or to intermediate points by T-A-T planes, is today just as simple as taking passage by train or boat? . . . And that it will not end, as a fad does, next month or the month after, but will continue to expand until the skies are streaked with giant metal planes?

The shaded portions of the map indicate the sections of the route traversed in Pullman cars at night. The entire trip from Coast to Coast takes only 48 hours. So most of the country you pass is revealed in golden sunlight.

Tickets may be purchased, are being purchased! at all railroad stations affiliated with the Santa Fe or Pennsylvania Railroad lines. Passage from New York to Los Angeles costs $351.94, and includes meals and all accommodations while aloft.

The Safe Road Aloft

The 48-hour trip begins at 6:05 P. M. on the "Airway Limited," a Pullman sleeper, departing from the Pennsylvania Station, New York. Dawn at Port Columbus discloses a Ford all-metal, tri-motored plane, with engines idling beside the rails. . . . A swift run! A new sensation of smoothness and extraordinary firmness and stability underfoot! You are aloft! As the world grows smaller beneath you, you experience a marvelous sensation of increased stature . . . of almost divine calmness . . . of a new and superior understanding.

FEAR? There is none. The swiftness of flight gives the air about you the density of water. Extend your hand through an open window. You can FEEL the air, just as you feel water when you trail your hand from a canoe! DIZZINESS? There is none. For there are no lines of perspective to draw you earthward. The world in panorama simply floats beneath you. You are traveling a pathway that mankind has never known until the birth of this progressive generation. You are feeling emotions indescribable only a few years ago.

You glide lightly to earth for a few minutes at Indianapolis . . . St. Louis . . . Kansas City . . . Wichita. . . . And as the sun begins to sink at Waynoka, at 6:24 o'clock, you come again to the spacious comfort of another Pullman sleeper. Dawn, once more, in Clovis. Once more you soar smoothly into the sky, desert beneath you and purple mountains beyond. You land for a few moments at Albuquerque . . . Winslow . . . Kingman. . . . And late in the afternoon the blue of the California sky reflects the deeper blue of the Pacific Ocean. You have crossed the North American continent on one of the most marvelous trips the genius of this age can offer you!

Stability has been equal to a cushioned limousine gliding over a cement road. The comfort has been that of a luxurious yacht, with a steward in attendance, and refreshments, iced or piping hot, at your order. Running hot and cold water in an immaculate lavatory were at your service. And the world below you was an open book of infinite fascination!

But what assured your SAFETY?

Two vital factors made your trip one of security.

1. All-metal construction.

The science of metallurgy has alone made possible the highest development of transport planes. Metal will not burn. And metal is of uniform strength. Planes built of the new alloys are uniformly strong. In comparison to the planes of war-time, and of the experimental era, when they were held together with glue and sticks and uncertain fabric, they are as a modern automobile compared to an old-fashioned wooden wagon. . . . That is why the great air liners of Germany are practically all of metal. . . . That is why in other countries the trend is toward all-metal planes. . . . That is why Ford built at least five years ahead of the modern trend in aviation!

2. THREE air-cooled motors of 1275 horse-power.

Two of these motors would have been sufficient to lift you from the ground and carry you to your destination. But in the transport of passengers over wide and uncertain areas, what if one engine failed? Immediate descent would have been necessary, though the glide might be extended over many miles. THE THIRD ENGINE IS YOUR EXTRA MARGIN OF SAFETY. For if one of three engines cuts out you may continue on to your destination in safety. And if one of the remaining two engines should by chance cut out you still have many miles for a reasonably safe landing. . . . That is why the trend in Germany is toward multi-engined ships. . . . That is why the Silver Wing air liners, the Imperial Airways of Great Britain, are tri-motored. . . . That is why Ford will build nothing less than a three-motored ship for human transport.

FOR UPON THE FACTOR OF SAFETY, MORE THAN ANYTHING ELSE, DEPENDS THE SUCCESS OF COMMERCIAL AVIATION.

This principle of safety first . . . established by the experts of the Transcontinental Air Transport . . . is a policy that is certain to carry this great new transportation company far on the wings of success.

ADVICE ON INVESTMENTS

By CHARLES W. STORM

Desirable to Diversify.

P. L. S.—I am about to purchase a Lautaro Nitrate 6 per cent 1954 bond. Do you consider this a considerable investment for practically one's entire savings?

Answer—Under no circumstances should you invest your entire savings in this bond issue. The bond only carries a fair rating. There are many other bonds which would be more suitable. Even if the bond had a higher rating it would still be desirable to diversify your investment by buying a smaller amount of 2 or 3 different issues.

Air Transport Company.

R. W. S.—Will you give me the facts of the Transcontinental Air Transport Corporation as an investment. Is it past the experimental stage? Where are shares obtainable?

Answer—The company was incorporated in May, 1929, by interests identified with the Pennsylvania and Atchison Railroads, the Keya-Hoyt banking interests, and National Air Transport. There is no basis on which to estimate what success this company will attain, as its operations have only recently been inaugurated. The company is well sponsored but in its present stage of development must be considered a radical speculation. Any reputable brokerage firm can execute your order if you wish to purchase.

She Has American Tel. & Tel.

Miss H. G.—Would appreciate advice on the list of stocks I am herewith inclosing. Would like to purchase some American Tel. & Tel. Is it too high to buy now? Does it pay a rate of interest on stock as it rises or just on par value?

Answer—Earnings for Cities Service Co. have been showing constant expansion. Stockholders in the past have always been well rewarded for long-term holding. This column can not predict price fluctuations. American Tel. & Tel. is considered a premier common stock for long-time holding. Can not tell you at what price to buy. The rate of dividend remains the same and does not fluctuate with the price of the stock. Brunswick Balke is well regarded as a speculative investment. Other issues mentioned are rated as speculations not suitable for conservative investment.

Issue Radical Speculation.

Miss L. V. W.—I have some G neral Baking common which I bought at 9 about eight months ago on the information that it would have an advance. It has been below 9 ever since. Do you consider it worth holding?

Answer—General Baking Corporation is the second largest of the National Baking chains, operating 50 plants in 39 principle population centers. Although profits have been increasing, common stock appears to be priced high on an earnings basis. The issue must be regarded as a radical speculation, not suitable for conservative investment holding.

Rated as Semi-Speculative.

A. B. P.—United Railway & Electric Co. bonds of Baltimore, 1949, 6s, were worth $100 in 1924, now quoted at 68. Can you give me any definite information as to the cause of this decline?

Answer—These bonds are rated by leading bond authorities as semi-speculative, which would mean that there are many bonds which carry a higher rating. This fact together with the prevailing high rate for money are undoubtedly responsible for the severe decline in the market price of these bonds. For conservating investment there are many bond issues which are more attractive.

Gone Up From 53 to 97.

A. H. M.—What do you think is the cause of the advance in the price of Pacific Gas & Electric common stock? It has gone from about 53 to 97 this year. Would you advise holding or selling?

Answer—It is impossible for the writer to accurately analyze the exact reason for the advance or decline in price of any security. All utility stocks have been in favor in recent months in the stock market and a general advance has occurred in this class of stocks. You must use your own judgment at what price to sell.

She Wants to Speculate.

Mrs. S. A. K.—Will you please advise me on the following stocks: American Ice, Standard Oil of New Jersey and Standard Oil of New York. Shall I hold them for higher levels? Is Stuart-Warner good at the present price? Will you please give me something good as a speculation for a quick rise?

Answer—The stocks mentioned are all well regarded and have attraction for long-term holding. This column, however, can not predict price fluctuations nor can a stock be suggested which will have a quick rise, as no method has ever been perfected to accurately foretell price fluctuations.

Not Conservative Investment.

B. O.—Does Sparks Whittington appear attractive for investment or speculation?

Answer—Sparks Whittington Co. realized the greater part of income from sale of radios. Expansion of profits this year has been rapid and it is probable that earnings for the fiscal year just closing will be more than double those of the previous like period. The stock of the company apparently has long term attraction as a speculation, but it could not be termed a conservative investment issue.

Not Specific on Gas Bonds.

C. R. G.—Will you kindly give me some information regarding National Electric Power Co? I have $5,000 in bonds of Washington Gas Co. What is their future outlook, also some stock of American Tel. & Tel. Co. on which I would like your opinion.

Answer—Earnings on the preferred stock of National Electric Power Co. were equivalent to $25.06 per share in 1928. Class A & B stock earned during the same period $6.35 and $2.03, respectively. The company is controlled by Middle West Utilities Co. and is highly regarded. You must be more specific regarding just what bonds you own before a rating can be given. American Tel. & Tel. Co. has been showing constantly increased earnings over a period of years and the common stock of the company is very highly regarded as a long-term investment holding.

The disturbance off the south Atlantic Coast is still of slight intensity, and it is apparently moving very slowly northward, with center about 200 miles off the South Carolina coast. The western disturbance has made little progress eastward, and it still has three centers. Edmonton, Alberta, 29.62 inches; Winnipeg, Manitoba, 29.66 inches, and Flagstaff, Ariz., 29.60 inches. This disturbance has caused scattered showers in the Rocky Mountain and plateau regions, and in North Dakota and the north Pacific States. Pressure is still quite high but falling slowly from the last region and the Ohio Valley eastward to the Atlantic Coast, Portland, Md., 30.58 inches, and another high-pressure area extends from eastern Alaska eastward to northern Hudson Bay, Mayo, Yukon Territory, 30.32 inches. The temperature has risen in the lake region and the upper Mississippi and lower Missouri Valleys, and it has fallen in Georgia, northern Florida, and in portions of the northern Rocky Mountain region.

The Seven Dials Mystery

A Serial Story By

THE STORY THUS FAR.

Gerry Wade is found dead in bed at Chimneys, scene of a house party. Seven out of eight alarm clocks placed in his room to awaken him are lined up on a mantel. The guests are told that death resulted from an overdose of sleeping powder. Jimmy Thesiger and Ronny Devereux motor to Gerry's home to tell a sister, Lenaine, of Wade's death.

Lady Eileen Brent, known as "Bundle," finds a letter Wade had written to his sister making reference to the "Seven Dials." Bundle feels certain that Gerry was murdered. En route to London a man, mysteriously shot, staggers into the road in front of Eileen's car. It proves to be Devereux, who, dying, whispers: "Seven Dials * * * tell * * * Jimmy Thesiger."

At Jimmy's quarters Bundle finds Lorraine. The three of them set out to trail the murderer. From Capt. Battle at Scotland Yard Bundle obtains a list of secret societies. That evening, with Bill Eversleigh, she is discussing the societies.

NOW CONTINUE THE STORY.

Bundle sat lost in thought for some minutes. Bill's list was suggestive, but she hadn't time to think out various possibilities just now. She must get on to the next point.

"Bill?" she said. "What's all this about Seven Dials?"

"I don't know what you mean," he said.

"Nonsense," said Bundle. "I was told you know all about it."

"About what?"

This was rather a poser. Bundle shifted her ground.

"I don't see what you want to be so secretive for," she complained.

To Seven Dials.

This sounded puzzling.

"One gets so out of things when one is away," said Bundle in a sad voice.

"Oh, you haven't missed much! said Bill. "Every one went there just to say they had been. It was boring really, and, my God, you can get tired of fried fish."

"Where did every one go?"

"To the Seven Dials Club, of course," said Bill, staring. "Wasn't that what you were asking about?"

"I didn't know it by that name," said Bundle.

"Used to be a slummy sort of a district round about Tottenham Court road way. It's all pulled down and cleaned up now. But the Seven Dials Club keeps to the old atmosphere. Fried fish and chips. General squalor. Kind of East End stunt, but awfully handy to get at after a show."

"It's a night club, I suppose," said Bundle. "Dancing and all that?"

"That's it. Awfully mixed crowd. Not a posh affair. Artists, you know, and all sorts of odd women and a sprinkling of our lot. They say quite a lot of things, but I think that that's all bunkum myself, just said to make the place go."

"Good," said Bundle. "We'll go there tonight."

"Oh!. I shouldn't do that," said Bill. His embarrassment had returned. "I tell you it's played out. Nobody goes there now."

"Well, we're going."

"You wouldn't care for it, Bundle. You wouldn't really."

"You're going to take me to the Seven Dials Club and nowhere else, Bill. And I should like to know why you are so unwilling?"

"I? Unwilling?"

"Painfully so. What's the guilty secret?"

"Guilty secret?"

"Don't keep repeating what I say. You do it to give yourself time."

"I don't," said Bill indignantly. "It's only——"

"Well? I know there's something. You can never conceal anything."

"Well?"

"It's a long story. You see, I took Babe St. Maur there one night——"

"Oh! Babe St. Maur again."

"Why not?"

"I didn't know it was about her," said Bundle, stifling a yawn.

"As I say, I took Babe there. She rather fancied a lobster. I had a lobster under my arm. * * *"

The story went on. When the lobster had been finally dismembered in a struggle between Bill and a fellow who was a rank outsider, Bundle brought her attention back to him.

"I see," she said. "And there was a row?"

"Yes, but it was my lobster. I'd bought it and paid for it. I had a perfect right——"

"Oh! you had, you had," said Bundle hastily. "But I'm sure that's all forgotten now. And I don't care for lobsters anyway. So let's go."

"We may be raided by the police. There's a room upstairs where they play bacarat."

"Father will have to come out and bail me out, that's all. Come on, Bill."

At 14 Hunstanton Street

Bill still seemed rather reluctant, but Bundle was adamant, and they were soon speeding to their destination in a taxi.

The place, when they got to it, was much as she imagined it would be. It was a tall house in a narrow street, 14 Hunstanton street; she noted the number.

A man whose face was strangely familiar opened the door. She thought he started slightly when he saw her, but he greeted Bill with respectful recognition. He was a tall man, with fair hair, a rather weak, anemic face and slightly shifty eyes. Bundle puzzled to herself where she could have seen him before.

Bill had recovered his equilibrium now and quite enjoyed doing showman. They danced in the cellar, which was very full of smoke—so much so that you saw every one through a blue haze. The smell of fried fish was almost overpowering.

On the wall were rough charcoal sketches, some of them executed with real talent. The company was extremely mixed. There were portly foreigners, opulent Jewesses, a sprinkling of the really smart, and several ladies belonging to the oldest profession in the world.

Soon Bill led Bundle upstairs. There the weak-faced man was on guard, watching all those admitted to the gambling room with a lynx eye. Suddenly recognition came to Bundle.

"Of course," she said. "How stupid of me! It's Alfred, who used to be second footman at Chimneys. How are you, Alfred?"

"Nicely, thank you, your ladyship."

"When did you leave Chimneys, Alfred? Was it long before we got back?"

"It was about a month ago, m'lady. I got a chance of bettering myself, and it seemed a pity not to take it."

"I suppose they pay you very well here," remarked Bundle.

"Very fair, m'lady."

Bundle passed in. It seemed to her that in this room the real life of the club was exposed.

The stakes were high, she saw that at once, and the people gathered round the two tables were of the true type—hawkeyed, haggard, with the gambling fever in their blood.

She and Bill stayed there for about half an hour. Then Bill grew restive.

"Let's get out of this place, Bundle, and go on dancing."

Bundle agreed. There was nothing to be seen here. They went down again. They danced for another half hour, had fish and chips, and then Bundle declared herself ready to go home.

"But it's so early," Bill protested.

"No, it isn't. Not really. And, anyway, I've got a long day in front of me tomorrow."

"What are you going to do?"

"That depends," said Bundle mysteriously. "But I can tell you this, Bill, the grass is not going to grow under my feet."

"It never does," said Mr. Eversleigh.

Inquiries at Chimneys.

BUNDLE'S temperament was certainly not inherited from her father, whose prevailing characteristic was a wholly amiable inertia. As Bill Eversleigh had very justly remarked, the grass never did grow under Bundle's feet.

On the morning following her dinner with Bill, Bundle woke full of energy. She had three distinct plans which she meant to put into operation that day, and she realized that she was going to be slightly hampered by the limits of time and space.

Fortunately she did not suffer from the affliction of Gerry Wade, Ronny Devereux and Jimmy Thesiger—that of not being able to get up in the morning. Sir Oswald Coote himself would have had no fault to find with her on the score of early rising. At half past 8 Bundle had breakfast and was on her way to Chimneys in the Hispano.

Her father seemed mildly pleased to see her.

"I never know when you're going to turn up, but this will save me ringing," he said, "which I hate. Col. Melrose was here yesterday about the inquest."

Summoned to the Inquest.

"You mean the inquest on Ronny Devereux? When is it to be?"

"Tomorrow. Twelve o'clock. Melrose will call for you. Having found the body, you'll have to give evidence, but he said you needn't be at all alarmed."

"Why on earth should I be alarmed?"

"Well, you know," said Lord Caterham apologetically, "Melrose is a bit old-fashioned."

"Twelve o'clock," said Bundle. "Good. I shall be here, if I'm still alive."

"Have you any reason to anticipate not being alive?"

"One never knows," said Bundle. "The strain of modern life, as the newspapers say."

"Which reminds me that George Lomax asked me to come over to the Abbey next week. I refused, of course."

"Quite right," said Bundle. "We don't want you mixed up in any funny business."

"Is there going to be any funny business?" asked Lord Caterham with a sudden awakening of interest.

"Well—warning letters and all that, you know," said Bundle.

"Perhaps George is going to be assassinated," said Lord Caterham hopefully. "What do you think, Bundle—perhaps I'd better go after all."

"You curb your bloodthirsty instincts and stay quietly at home," said Bundle. "I'm going to talk to Mrs. Howell."

Checking Up.

Mrs. Howell was the housekeeper, that dignified, creaking lady who had struck such terror to the heart of Lady Coote. She had no terrors for Bundle, whom, indeed, she always called Miss Bundle, a relic of the days when Bundle had stayed at Chimneys, a long-legged, impish child, before her father had succeeded to the title.

"Now, Howelly," said Bundle, "let's have a cup of rich cocoa together, and let me hear all the household news."

"Two new scullery maids—village girls—doesn't seem much there. New third housemaid—head housemaid's niece. That sounds all right. Howelly seems to have bullied poor Lady Coote a good deal. She would."

"I never thought the day would come when I should see Chimneys inhabited by strangers, Miss Bundle."

"Oh! One must go with the times," said Bundle. "You'll be lucky, Howelly, if you never see it converted into desirable flats with use of superb pleasure grounds."

Mrs. Howelly shivered all down her reactionary aristocratic spine.

"I've never seen Sir Oswald Coote," remarked Bundle.

"Sir Oswald is no doubt a very clever gentleman," said Mrs. Howell distantly.

"Of course, it was Mr. Bateman who saw to everything," continued the housekeeper.

"A very efficient gentleman. A very efficient gentleman indeed, and one who knew the way things ought to be done."

Bundle led the talk on to the topic of Gerald Wade's death. Mrs. Howell was only too willing to talk about it, and was full of pitying ejaculations about the poor young gentleman, but Bundle gleaned nothing new. Presently she took leave of Mrs. Howell and came downstairs again, where she promptly rang for Tredwell.

Central Public Service Corporation

A growing system of well established public utility properties

CENTRAL PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION, through its subsidiaries, operates gas, electric light and power, transportation and other utilities in 21 eastern states and two Canadian provinces. These are located as far west as Wisconsin and as far south as Florida.

The most recent acquisitions are the gas properties in such leading southern cities as Atlanta, Augusta and Macon, Georgia; Charleston, South Carolina; Roanoke, Virginia; Mobile and Montgomery, Alabama, and Pensacola, Florida.

The Corporation's record of growth and expansion during the period from June 1925 to May 1929 created by a sound and conservative management, is of particular significance in estimating the future. Today the Corporation, through its subsidiaries, has about 294,000 metered customers, an approximate increase of 239% over 1925. The number of communities served totals 357, an increase of 149%, embracing a population of 2,200,000, an increase of 287%.

The intensive development and growth of the System is indicated by the following figures, as officially reported: Gas sales increased 13.9% during 1928 over gas sales for the same properties for 1927. The approximate per cent increase for the country as a whole was 3.4%. Electric sales increased 16.1% during 1928 over electric sales for the same properties for 1927. Approximate per cent increase for the industry as a whole was 8.7%. These increases in gas and electric sales were reflected in an increase of 12.9% in net earnings of the Corporation for 1928 as compared with 1927.

Further increase in earnings is expected to result from an extensive construction program completed during 1928, which included extensions providing for a substantial increase in customers. The operating subsidiaries of the Corporation now own electric generating stations with a combined capacity of 97,219 h.p., of which 27,729 h.p. is hydro-electric.

The management has adopted conservative expansion as the keynote for the further development of the Central Public Service System, and the future of the Corporation should favorably reflect this policy.

DISTRICT A. A. U. CHAPTER TAKES SHAPE TONIGHT

Hayes' Sacrifice Follows Bunting Attack to Win Game.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

IT TOOK the Nationals ten innings to defeat the Athletics yesterday in a game in which many of the fans, hustling home with two out in the allen ninth, thought they had won in regulation time. The final score was 7 to 6, the new league champs suddenly staging a 4-run rally after two were out in round 9 to knot the string and make another frame necessary.

Irving Hadley, who pitched super ball his last time out, was in great form again yesterday, but, like the cow which gives a nice bucket of milk and then kicks it over, he wobbled when he apparently had an easy victory within his grasp, and Fred Marberry rushed to the hill, stopped the onslaught, and then sneaked home with the victory, his sixteenth of the season, to his credit.

The veteran, Connie Mack, decided to use the game as a good workout for his three mound stars, and he called on Lefty Grove, George Earnshaw and Rube Walberg for three-inning shifts. While all three were stingy with hits, Grove allowing none, the Nats managed to get their seven at most timely moments, while three Mackian errors also proved mighty helpful.

Until Hadley suddenly caved in in the ninth, he gave the visitors quite a battle, holding them to five hits for 8 2-3 innings. Then the cyclone struck and he was removed post haste. The Nats nicked Earnshaw for four bingles and Walberg for three.

Most of Excitement in Last 2 Frames.

Most of the excitement was packed into the last two frames. The Nats practically won the game on bunts, getting their deciding run in the tenth on Cronin's tap down the third-base line, West's in the same place.

Hendricks, Reds' Manager For 6 Years, Resigns Post

CINCINNATI, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—Jack Hendricks, manager of the Cincinnati National League Baseball team, today handed in his resignation, effective at the end of the season, October 6.

Mr. Hendricks said he would represent the Reds at the annual draft meeting in Chicago and his work would be finished. He said he had no future plans and did not know who would pilot the team next year.

Hendricks is completing six years at the helm of the Reds, having taken over the direction of the team March 7, 1924, at the death of Pat Moran in Orlando, Fla., the Reds' spring training camp.

Though there have been numerous rumors regarding a successor for Hendricks, the club management said nothing would be done until the conclusion of the world's series. Both Donie Bush, who resigned the managerial position at Pittsburgh several weeks ago, and Clarence Rowland, manager of the Nashville Club of the Southern Association, have been mentioned as probable pilots, but there has been no official statement regarding either.

"I Found a Horseshoe," Now Sings This Golfer

There is a story connected with 18-year-old Lawson Little, the San Francisco golfer, worth telling, since it happens to be true. Down the stretch in the qualifying round of the recent United States amateur championship at Pebble Beach he was on the ragged edge and he looked to be out of the championship. With only a few holes to go, he found an old horseshoe and stuck it in his bag. From that point he began to hit every shot like a champion, says the Boston Globe.

Bannockburn Golf Medal To Hair

2 Club Tournaments Reach Semifinals; Other Golf News.

By HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST.

IN the Bannockburn invitation golf tournament last week there was a triple tie for low medal in the qualification round between Erwin P. Hair, Washington Golf and Country Club; M. F. McCarthy, Beaver Dam, and William L. Pendergast, Bannockburn, each with cards totaling 77 strokes. The tie was played off on the Bannockburn course yesterday and resulted in a victory for Hair by one stroke.

All of the contestants were out in 40 and on the fourteenth tee Pendergast had a lead of two strokes. He failed to win the medal on qualification day by taking seven strokes on the fourteenth hole and yesterday the same hole proved equally disastrous. He was not more than 20 yards from the pin on his second stroke, but after playing his third, took four putts to add another fatal 7 to his card, while Hair holed out in a par 4.

Hair, Pendergast All-Even on 17th Tee.

On the seventeenth tee Hair and Pendergast were even, McCarthy, who was five strokes behind, having picked up on the sixteenth hole. Pendergast's tee shot from the seventeenth landed his ball in the ditch, costing him a 5 to Hair's 4, and the advantage of one stroke was held by Hair when both halved the eighteenth in par 4s. Hair had an 81 as against Pendergast's 82.

NATS OPPOSE WHITE SOX TODAY

Brown and Lyons to Pitch; Loepp Hurt, May Not Report.

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

ALTHOUGH the schedule shows the Nationals drawing an open date this afternoon, they have arranged to use the blank for playing off a game postponed when the Chicago White Sox were last here. Manager Lena Blackburne is expected to call on Ted Lyons for his slab duties, while Lloyd Brown, who pitched a brilliant shut-out victory over Bucky Harris' Tigers his last time out, will be given a chance to show that this was no fluke and that he has finally reached the form which his training camp activities promised.

There is some doubt whether Outfielder George Loepp will join the Nationals. Manager Johnson had in mind taking a look at this lad, recently purchased from Baltimore, against some of the Yankee southpaws when Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig and Company play a four-game series here beginning Thursday, but a report was received from the Orioles yesterday to the effect that the player is suffering from an injured ankle.

If the injury responds to treatment sufficiently to get Loepp in playing condition by Thursday, the youngster will report; otherwise, he will not get a trial until at the 1930 training camp.

Kenesaw Mountain Landis, high commissioner of baseball, was in Washington yesterday, but on personal business. He did not find time either to communicate with President Clark Griffith or to attend yesterday's Washington-Philadelphia game.

The Nats' first hit yesterday, credited to Goslin with one out in the fourth, was a gift from "Mule" Haas and "Bing" Miller. Either might have caught the drive but, rather than take a chance on a collision, both stopped and pulled the famous "Alphonse-Gaston" act.

Preliminary Meeting Is Scheduled

National Officer Will Preside at Gathering of D. C. Delegates.

Election of Nominating Committee to Be Feature.

WITH Daniel J. Ferris, of New York City, national secretary-treasurer, presiding, representatives of a score or more of local clubs and schools will meet tonight at the Jewish Community Center to effect preliminary organization of the long-sought District of Columbia Association of the Amateur Athletic Union. The meeting will open at 8 o'clock.

An election of a nominating committee, which will prepare a slate of officers to be presented at another meeting on October 15, is the main item of business to be transacted tonight. In addition, Secretary Ferris will outline the aims and principles of the A. A. U. and recite the history of that national amateur sports governing body.

Leaders in the development of the Capital association were unanimous last night in predicting a successful meeting. All said they will attend with one and the same purpose—to send the new branch of the union away to a smooth start—and that the common good of the organization will occupy their thoughts and speech to the exclusion of all other subjects.

19 Clubs and Schools in Original Group.

Though there were nineteen clubs and schools in the group of petitioners who moved last March for a Washington Association, separate and distinct from the South Atlantic Association, until then the controlling body in local sport affairs, it is expected that tonight's meeting will attract at least a half-dozen additional clubs or schools who seek membership.

H. J. Odenthal, of the City Club, temporary chairman of the petitioners, will take the chair at the opening and will recite the events leading up to the present time in the organization work. He will then turn over the gavel to Secretary Ferris.

At the direction of Secretary Ferris, the petitioning bodies have each named three delegates to the session, each trio having the power of a single vote. The nominating committee will be composed of from five to seven members, the exact number being a question for Secretary Ferris to decide.

Nominating Committee Important Group.

No indications as yet have been given in any quarter as to the probable nominees for membership in the nominating group. Interested parties last night avoided discussion of this subject, stating that they were sure a committee satisfactory to everybody concerned will be elected.

Much importance will be attached to the work of the nominating committee, for in the hands of that body will lie the setting-up of the official structure of the association. When the committee reports its recommendations at the permanent organization meeting on October 15, it will be virtually tantamount to the official election, although it will not prevent further nominations by individuals who might be disposed to place additional candidates in the field.

Aim to Be Represented At National Meeting.

It is planned to launch the Washington association in time to gain representation at the national convention of the A. A. U. in St. Louis in November. National President Avery Brundage, of Chicago, has expressed a desire to see the Capital chapter so represented.

Following is a list of the original petitioning organizations, all of whom will be represented tonight:

City Club, "C" Club, Knights of Columbus, Jewish Community Center, Peck Memorial A. C., Rialto Club, Terminal Railroad Y. M. C. A., Queensberry Club, Catholic University, Y. M. C. A., Potomac Boat Club, Boys Club, Georgetown University, Washington Canoe Club, George Washington University, District National Guard, American University, Veterans of Foreign Wars and Municipal Playgrounds.

ROUTIS RISKS HIS TITLE TONIGHT

Battalino 3-2 Choice Over Champion in Hartford Ring.

HARTFORD, Conn., Sept. 22 (A.P.).—A fighting kid with a name designed for warfare—Bat Battalino—was as keen as he could be tonight to knock the featherweight championship from the brow of Andre Routis, fading French titleholder, in a 15-round duel tomorrow night in the Hurley Stadium.

Only 21 years old, with but three years of professional milling behind him and not one major battle outside his home State of Connecticut, young Battalino, christened Christopher, is a 3 to 2 favorite to defeat the French champion in the first title fight held here since Kid Kaplan, of Meridan, the last crown holder, from the Nutmeg State, defended his laurels here against Bobby Garcia in 1926.

Well-Filled and Well-Balanced Monday Card Offered.

THE offering at Havre de Grace this afternoon, is far and above the average usually doled out by racing associations for wash-day patrons. With well-filled and well-balanced fields parading in a majority of the events competition of a wholesome and spirited nature should come out of the afternoon's sport. The card is just another tribute to the uncanny skill of Secretary Joe McLennan in framing the conditions of his program so as to bring out the best of those campaigners eligible for the different heats.

Those speculatively inclined will find a wide range from which to center on winner. However, Walter J. Salmon's Swinfield stands out as the most solid hazard of the day. The black son of Swinbourne has been keeping company with such stars as Whichone, Boojum and others, and at no time has he been completely outclassed. He is in well under 114 pounds and this way rigged should have no excuses.

Havre de Grace Selections

By LEONARD W. COLLINS

FIRST RACE—Five and one-half furlongs; for maiden 2-year-old fillies.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
964	Enid	114	952	Distinguish	114
963	The Kid	114	960	Rosern	114

961	Curtsey	114	947	Kitty Marie	114

957	Rosatina	114	944	Lang	114
953	Kai-Lo	114	943	Rocket Glare	114
955	Luscinia	114	941	Sun Frances	114
954	Mary Eloise	114	938	Vacate	114
952	Susie Jane	114		Amytis	114

ENID should earn her first set of brackets in the 5½ furlongs of this maiden affair. The chestnut daughter of Rockminster is more or less inclined to leave the barrier sluggishly, but is generally running when the others have called it a day. If Georgie Fields can get her away with the first flight the issue after passing the quarter pole should never be in doubt. BROWN SINNER is another that lacks early foot, but once in stride will be running over horses at the end. THE KID has been given the benefit of a let-up, yet his last outing at Hawthorne would indicate that he has found his speed.

SECOND RACE—Six furlongs; claiming; for 3-year-olds and upward.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
987	Complication	107	952	Catlettsburg	103

953	Styl. Mack	107	936	Wrench	112

COMPLICATION is given the preference over MAC MAXIM in this event for no other reason than that the Mohawk Stable's color bearer leaves the gate with the essence of a Winchester and should escape all interference in the event of any crowding at the start. Gifted with a high flight of early speed the High Time gelding should draw out and then coast home on the chin strap. MAC MAXIM will prove a hard nut to crack with clear racing room. Guy Bedwell has the son of Golden Maxim keyed for a winning effort. ANACONDA will find the three-quarters of this number more to his liking than extended routes. THE TARTAR seems overweighted.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
972	Swinfield	114	956	Hacky H	106

959	Shun Ture	109	944	Joe Teddy	109
958	Ned O	111		Torrito	106

SWINFIELD is dropping 11 pounds from his last start at Belmont, when he finished 7½ lengths off Whichone in the Futurity. Taking a line through that effort, the Salmon entrant gets a two-point call over SKIRL, which was the victim of an overconfident ride on the part of Sonny Workman last Saturday. SKIRL, however, will take a whale of a beating should Jimmy Rowe send him postward. FRUMPER has received the benefit of any number of educationals, and if the stable places their reliance in the son of Pennant, he figures next best. PORTSUR will be close up at the finish.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
971	Lisa	103	966	Port Harlem	112
969	Molasses J	110	964	Nettie Stone	105
967	Altitude	110	861	S. Genevieve	105

LISA shapes up as a standout in the fourth. The Mad Hatter filly has not been out in over a month, but Trainer Rowe makes few mistakes in sending half-ripe candidates out to gather in the grapes. A race back to that which she ran in back of Aquastella would find the Whitney miss well out in front when passing the judges' pagoda. MOLASSES JANE displayed a corking effort in her first appearance under colors. This filly may be a trifle better than rated, and if so the top one will not dare to make any mistakes. ALTITUDE should account for what is left of the spoils.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles; for 3-year-olds and up.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
974	Fair Ball	110	968	Recreation	105
971	Light View	108	967	Hypoluxo	106
970	War Eagle	108	964	Helen Dean	100

FAIR BALL will have LIGHT VIEW to contend with in the running of the mile and a sixteenth of the feature, although WAR EAGLE, if in a running mood, may offer stubborn competition. LIGHT VIEW was coming on in Saturday's race and it is just possible that the Rock View gelding needed the outing for a tightener. However, the figures lean to the Hertz entrant. WAR EAGLE has been going along steadily in morning trials and should get some portion of the purse. RECREATION is an unreliable speculative proposition.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles; for 3-year-olds and up.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
969	Friar Cliff	113	956	Bridegroom	119
967	Bucky Harris	114	956	Fair Thorn	102
966	Ruby Keller	111	955	Afterglow	114
963	Son of John	114	953	Eager Play	108
962	Five Oaks	111	952	The Freshman	115
960	Blue Darter	117	930	Clarifier	109

FRIAR CLIFF is picking up five pounds off his race of last Friday, but the additional impost should not affect his running in this heat. It is merely a question as to whether he will relish the distance. BUCKY HARRIS ran a smashing race in his appearance with the colors up last Saturday. The race did him no harm—if anything, benefited him—and an improved effort can be anticipated today. RUBY KELLER, off some races, would have better than an outside chance. Should it come mud the chances of the Theo. Cook filly would be considerably enhanced. The winner may be among the others, but the figures don't say so.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles; for 3-year-olds and up.

Hdcp.		Wgt.	Hdcp.		Wgt.
961	As. Charlie	113	945	Prude II	108

952	Braham	108	935	Semper Felix	108
950	Horologe	106	933	Ed Pendleton	113
949	Sh. Flapper	105	931	Bethlehem	110
947	Fair Girl	103	930	Mad Maid	105

ASSESSOR CHARLIE is a consistent trick and will have GENIAL to trim. The latter has been working up to brackets and is right now at the peak of his form. However, ASSESSOR CHARLIE will be with the early pace and if he retains his speed when the real racing begins has better than a Chinaman's chance to fall into the winner's circle. TAZEWELL has been given a long rest, but has been taking his daily dozen under the watchful eye of Clint Smithson out at bid Benning. It may be that he will need a race.

COLLYER'S COMMENT on the SPORT of KINGS

BY BERT E. COLLYER

FLYER—Boys, here comes the devil. For the benefit of the uninitiated I might elucidate that the "devil" in turf parlance is something or other that does not give a tinker's imprecation, wotever'neil that is, for anything or anybody. Such is FLYER, which received his final prep at Arlington Park, shipped East for a melon cutting, and is cherry ripe. Goes in the third spasm at Havre de Grace and "Wee" Miller has passed the word. PARTICULAR, the Bryson trick, and SUN VIEW for what is left. Further than that, component sayeth nothing.

ENID, which is named in the day's opener, seems to have been dropped into a real snug spot. As a matter of fact, she has a five-point call over the balance of the field and should win easily. AZIZ is one of the clocker's fancy, as her works have bordered on the sensational. SUSIE JANE, DISTINGUISHED and COURTESY are closely bunched.

The overnight commission horse was RUBY KELLER, a winner last time. There was oddles of kale in Pittsburgh and this thing dough talks.

Out at Lincoln Fields, the old Wopsy Tiger is FETISH, a trick which has been burning up the track in recent morning trials. The clockers give her a seven-point call, hence watch your step. LIGHT AIR is very favorably placed in the third, with the opposition probably coming from the consistent CORRINE STAR. The latter will be better favored in the event the going turns muddy.

BOWIE MOTOR NINE WINS PRINCE GEORGES TITLE

Mt. Rainiers Are Beaten, 17 to 13

5 Pitchers Are Used in Free-Hitting Contest.

Winners Meet Montgomery Champs in 3-Game Series.

DEFEATING the Mount Rainier Nine, 17 to 13, in a free-for-all struggle at Bowie yesterday, the Bowie Motor Co. Team won the Prince Georges County unlimited championship. The newly crowned champs thereby gained the right to meet the Takoma Tigers, champions of Montgomery County, in a three-game intercounty series starting next Sunday.

It was a wild and erratic but thrilling contest that kept the crowd of 3,500 fans on edge throughout. The game late inning rallies of the Mounts left the ultimate decision in doubt until the last three runs were scored in the ninth.

Pitchers looked much alike to the rival batsmen. Brymer, who started for the winners, was relieved in the sixth due to wildness and Roche, who took up the assignment, was touched rather freely.

Three Mt. Rainier Hurlers Ineffective.

Three Mount Rainier hurlers were unable to still the Bowie sluggers, although Waple worked well in the closing rounds.

Bowie took a healthy lead in the second and just about clinched the verdict in the fifth and sixth.

The Bowie and Takoma Tiger nines will probably clash in a single game at Silver Spring next Sunday, with a twin engagement at Bowie the following Sunday. The rival managers will complete plans for the series this week.

NATS BEAT MACKS, 7-6, IN 10 INNINGS

and then another duplicate by Spencer. The first two went as hits, but Hale was charged with an error on Spencer's, although it would have taken a most brilliant play to have caught him. These happenings filled the bases and Hayes then broke up the game with a sacrifice fly to left which was so deep that Cramer never even made an attempt to stop the run from scoring.

All of the fireworks in the ninth were touched off by the visitors. With the Nats sailing comfortably along under a 4-run lead, it looked like simply a question of finishing out the game when the first two up were easy outs. That a game is not over until the final out is turned in was then demonstrated. Burns singled and took second when Summa followed suit. A walk to Hale filled the runways and Mack then called on Eric McNair, a $25,000 Knoxville recruit, to hit for Boley. And he did, doubling to left center and clearing the bases.

Had Hadley been able to dispose of Perkins, he still would have saved the day for himself, but the veteran catcher spanked the ball to right, driving home the tying run. Then Marberry got busy, forced Walberg to loft to Goslin and retired three in a row in the tenth on two fouls and a strikeout.

It had been a great pitching duel in the early rounds, with neither team scoring until the fifth. Then both teams were up and doing, with the Nats doing more. Miller's triple to left and Hale's air sacrifice broke the ice and the home gang retaliated with a four-run blast.

This cluster of runs was made with a minimum of hitting effort, however, only one bingle being needed. Earnshaw hit Spencer and, after Hayes had fouled out, filled the bases by walking Hadley and Judge. One scored on Rice's tap to Morse and another tallied when the rookie second baseman muffed the ball. Goslin then singled another over and the fourth counted while a force play was being made from Myer's roller to Morse.

The other runs were scored in the next session, with the Nats again bettering their guests' efforts. Singles by Perkins, Earnshaw and Haas netted an alien tally, while the home gang scored its pair from a base on balls and doubles by Hayes and Judge.

Third Baseman Jack Hayes and Goslin were the only Nationals to get more than one hit, being credited with two, while Cy Perkins' brace of singles gave him high gun honors for the visitors, although the "big" blow of the contest was McNair's timely double in the ninth.

Cards and Robins Split Two Games, 7-2, 4-0

St. Louis, Sept. 22 (A.P.).—The St. Louis Cardinals divided a double-header with Brooklyn today and retained their lead of 4½ games in the fight for fourth place. Jim Lindsey, young Cardinal hurler from Houston, gave Vance a battle for seven innings in the first game, but was batted out in the eighth, when Brooklyn staged a five-run rally to win, 7 to 2. In the nightcap, Al Grabowski, flashy rookie from Danville, Ill., fanned eight batters to score a shut-out over the Dodgers, 4 to 0.

65,000 STUDENTS TO ENROLL TODAY IN CITY'S SCHOOLS

PORTABLE BUILDINGS TO BE USED AGAIN

New Structures Will Be Ready for Use in Few Months.

"Melancholy days are come," so say the poet, the United States Weather Bureau and some 65,000 Washington boys and girls who today trudge back to books and lessons in the 1929 progeny of the little red school house. For with the official advent of autumn today, school bells will summon the city's youth from its summer leisure, and another nine months' pursuit of erudition will begin.

Public School officials, headed by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent, have everything in readiness for the largest school enrollment in the history of the city. Two thousand seven hundred teachers will be awaiting their pupils at 9 o'clock this morning in the 175 public school buildings throughout the District.

A first day enrollment of 65,500 pupils is anticipated, with the classes gradually enlarging until late fall when approximately 75,000 children probably will be in the schools. It is estimated that 57,000 children will attend classes in the elementary grades, 15,000 in the junior high schools and high schools, and 1,000 students in the normal institutions, in addition to increased enrollment in the trade schools.

Opening day last year 63,128 pupils enrolled, of which 43,546 were white, and 19,582 colored. The enrollment last year was made up of 50,336 elementary school pupils, 12,328 high school and 464 normal.

With the anticipated record-breaking enrollment finding none of the new school buildings, now nearing completion, ready to receive students, 72 of the objectionable portable buildings will again be used, and school officials declare that it will be necessary to place several thousand children in part-time classes. Dr. Ballou, however, is optimistic over the outlook, pointing out that by the end of the first semester a net increase of 74 classrooms will be supplied through completion of the new school buildings. Not only will they provide amply for the increased enrollment, he believes, but also will materially relieve much of the congestion which has hampered classes in recent years.

Four new elementary schools are nearing completion, while ten others have additions or assembly halls under construction, it was pointed out, and three new junior high schools are being built, the Alice Deal at Reno, the Paul at Brightwood and the Eliot at Nineteenth and East Capitol streets.

Additional Facilities.

Additional facilities which these structures will provide after caring for the normal increase in enrollment probably will be applied to a reduction of part-time classes which, of necessity, will be organized shortly after the opening of the schools.

The eight-room addition to the Raymond School at Rock Creek and Spring roads northwest is scheduled to be the first of the new white schools to be completed, and classes probably will be formed there within six weeks. The new ten-room Langdon School, the eight-room Ben W. Murch, the eight-room Powell, the Paul Junior High School, with twelve elementary grade rooms, and the Adams, with sixteen, all will be occupied by February 1, it is believed.

The 8-room addition to the Burrville School, and the addition to the Francis Junior High School, both colored, will be ready for occupany by the first of next month, while the Morgan School probably will be used for colored classes when the John Quincy Adams School is put into service.

Pupils returning to their former school buildings today for promotion are to report at 9 o'clock to their last year's classroom, from where they will be sent to the higher classes. Those who are being transferred from one building to another, and who received their transfer cards in June, will go direct to their new schools, while those who have not obtained transfer cards will report to old classrooms.

Age Must be Proved.

Children entering school for the first time, either in kindergarten or in the first grade, are to be taken by one of their parents or guardians to the school building nearest their homes. Birth certificates, or other acceptable documentary evidence of the new pupil's age, should be brought along with the child, and all new pupils must be vaccinated before they enter classes. It is estimated that 1,500 or 2,000 youngsters will embark upon their school careers here today.

School officials have decided, in an effort to relieve congestion at Western High School, to limit the admittance of new pupils there to those who reside west of Rock Creek and Connecticut avenue, although second, third and fourth year students of the school will be permitted to continue at Western regardless of where they live.

Beginning today senior high schools will go on a new five-hour day basis, Assistant Superintendent Stephen E. Kramer, in charge of high schools, has announced. This 30-minute lengthening of the high school day has been adopted to provide full 45-minute periods for each class throughout the day, to give ample time for class changes at the termination of each period, and to afford longer section room periods so that section teachers may establish closer contact with the pupils in their charge.

Schoolboy Patrols.

With the expected great influx of children into the streets on their way to and from school beginning today, the District division of the American Automobile Association has again initiated its schoolboy patrol, assisted by the Washington police, and has issued the following safety precautions for motorists, parents and children:

"Motorists—Remember that children run fast, but do not think as fast on traffic safety; learn to look for the child who unexpectedly darts into the streets; make sure that your brakes are in good condition; don't give 'lifts' in your car (you encourage children to stand in streets); watch for children on roller skates.

"Parents—Start your child to school in time so he will not have to run; 'be careful' is an overworked phrase, use something else to remind your child of safety; train your child in safety by example; see that your child knows the following rules:

"Children—Look both ways before crossing streets; cross at crosswalks, not in the middle of blocks; walk across streets, don't run; if you must run, do it on sidewalks; don't step into street from between parked cars; don't play in the streets."

Reminders of Safety.

In cooperation with the dairy companies of the city the American Automobile Association has arranged for a little safety reminder in the form of a tag to be placed on approximately 80,000 bottles of milk to be delivered at Washington homes this morning. The tag calls attention to the dangers of the streets, especially to the little tots using them for the first time. The radio stations of the city last night broadcast appeals to parents and motorists to aid in the safety campaign and reduce previous years' appalling records of fatalities.

STUNTS SCHEDULED BY ARMY AVIATORS

Spectacular Air Maneuvers Will Be Feature of Big Military Exposition.

ORPHANS WILL BE AIDED

An air fleet of 66 pursuit, bombardment and attack planes will be seen in action at the military exposition and carnival to be held at Washington Barracks October 3-5. The larger portion of this force will come from the American Legion convention at Louisville, Ky., and will be joined by nine pursuit, four bombardment and nine attack planes from Eastern airports. Some of the greatest pilots of the United States Air Force will participate.

The fliers perform a whirlwind of air acrobatics and superstunt flying, will lay smoke screens, stage air battles and present other exhibitions both day and night.

Word has come from Fort Myer that the crack Machine Gun Troop of the Third United States Cavalry has been practicing daring feats of horsemanship and will put them on for the benefit of spectators at the military show.

Both the renowned Black Horse and White Horse Artillery Batteries of the crack Sixteenth Field Artillery Regiment, in all their colorful equipment and panoply of arms, will perform maneuvers at the afternoon and evening performances. One of the most interesting features of the program will be a miniature skirmish by the Third Cavalry.

The show is for the benefit of the Army Relief Society, the organization that cares for the widows and orphans of former service men.

Hitting Head on Gas Jet Proves Fatal to Man

The apparently harmless gesture of lifting a watch from the floor resulted in the death yesterday of Walter F. Honesty, colored, 56 years old, of 2234 Thirteenth street northwest. Last Thursday, Honesty was shaving at his home when he dropped his watch. He stooped to pick it up and while straightening struck his head on a gas jet. Beyond a headache, he appeared to be none the worse for his injury that day, but by night he sank into a coma and was taken to Emergency Hospital. At the hospital, he never regained consciousness. He died early yesterday afternoon from a fracture of the base of the skull, doctors said.

Man Pushing Auto From Tracks Hurt

Street Car Rounds Curve and Strikes Helper of Motorist.

While pushing a stalled automobile off the track early yesterday morning at Third and T streets northwest, William Rosenbaugh, colored, 31 years old, of 316 V street northwest, was seriously injured when a street car rounded the curve and struck him.

He was taken to Freedmen's Hospital, where he was reported to be suffering from concussion of the brain and broken ribs. His condition was said to be undetermined.

Rosenbaugh is said to have gone to the assistence of Luke Studivant, 319 Oakdale street northwest, when the latter's car stalled on the track. He was in the act of pushing the car from the track when the street car came around the corner. Frank Matthews, of 217-A P street northwest, the motorman on the street car, said that he did not have time to stop after sighting the car.

YOUR CITY GOVERNMENT

Answers to Queries From Post Readers on Municipal Matters.

Q. What is the tax rate in Washington? How does it compare with other cities?—N. O.

A. The tax rate on real property is $1.70 per $100 of value. Comparison of tax rates of various cities means little or nothing. Too much depends on the basis on which assessments are made and taxes are imposed. Because of the variation in these conditions it is not easy to draw analogies which would be conclusive. Assessed values in the District are at 100 per cent. Private homes get the benefit of the doubt and usually are assessed at a lower figure than are business buildings in comparison with their actual sale price. District officials insist that the District tax rate is not materially lower than the tax rate in other comparable cities, when these factors are taken into consideration. It might be added they declare there is less discrepancy and favoritism between properties in Washington than in any other large city.

Q. There is an old, large tree alongside my home which sticks out in the alley and it makes it difficult and dangerous to get into and out of the alley. It seems to me this tree should be removed by the city government because it is on public land, that is, in the alley. What can we do to have the tree removed?—J. D.

A. Clifford Lanham, superintendent of trees and parkings, has charge of such matters. If the tree is dangerous Mr. Lanham undoubtedly will take immediate steps to remove it.

Q. Can gorillas be kept in captivity? How long do they live?—J. P.

A. Your inquiry should be addressed to Dr. William Mann, head of the National Zoological Park.

Q. I have been given a tax bill for $54.40 on my home although it is only a small place. The assessed value of it is $3,200, but most of this value has been because I have worked hard to make it a nice home. Is it right that I should have to pay such taxes? —J. W.

A. The tax rate on real estate in the District is $1.70 per $100 of assessed value. This would make your tax bill $54.40, the figure you name. To attempt to answer your question about the propriety of penalizing you, in the form of taxes, for your thrift and care of your home would be to launch into a dissertation on theories of taxation. This is without the province of this column. You can appeal to the tax board of appeals from the assessment of your property, sir.

NEW SYNAGOGUE'S OPENING OBSERVED WITH CEREMONIES

Senator King and Taliaferro Speak at Dedication of B'nai Israel.

JEWS' ACHIEVEMENTS PRAISED BY FORMER

Boy, 10, Urges Congregation to Establish School in Renovated Building.

Addresses by Senator William H. King, of Utah, and District Commissioner Sidney F. Taliaferro featured exercises at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon dedicating the new synagogue of the congregation and the Talmud Torah, or Hebrew School of Bnai Israel, at Fourteenth and Emerson streets northwest.

The synagogue was packed almost to capacity with members of the congregation, of other Jewish synagogues of the city, and a number of invited guests, many of whom remained to partake of refreshments and to inspect the renovated structure, which before its purchase was known as the Iowa Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

An auspicious entry was made into the new building by members of the congregation, following a parade of approximately 75 automobiles from the old church structure, which has been occupied by the congregation for four years, at Georgia avenue and Decatur street northwest.

Welcome by Morris Wittlin.

With Benjamin L. Tepper presiding, the exercises opened with an address of welcome by Morris Wittlin, chairman of the dedication committee, and invocation by Rabbi J. T. Loeb, of the Fifth Street Synagogue.

Hyman Klavans, who has served as president of the Bnai Israel congregation since its establishment four years ago with eight members, traced the history of the body from its inception to the present.

He was followed by Commissioner Taliaferro, who spoke of the value of churches of various denominations in a community, and by the Rev. Chesteen Smith, pastor of the Hamline Methodist Episcopal Church.

Senator King eulogized the Jewish race for its achievements and for its successes in every place where its members have gone. He also spoke of the prominent part the Jewish people are playing in Washington and complimented the congreation on its acquisition of the new synagogue.

Boy, 10, Urges School.

Other speakers included Stanley H. Kamerow, 10-year-old boy, who spoke of the need for a Hebrew school; Rabbi Abram Simon, of the Eighth Street Temple, and Harry Himmelfarb, treasurer of the congregation.

A musical program under direction of Meyer Siegal included a vocal selection by Sidney Resnick, accompanied by Miss Louise Schnurman, and a vocal number by Miss Dora Sadle, accompanied by Miss Nettie Sadle.

Others cooperating in the arrangements were Morris Friedenberg, parade marshal; Louis Kalichstein, J. A. Kamerow, Joseph Marks, Mrs. Bessie Friedenberg, Mrs. J. Oser, Mrs. M. M. Bernstein and Miss Frances Schlom.

Announcement was made that the congregation had obtained Morris Bomberg, of New York, to officiate during the high holy days on October 5, 6 and 14.

THE NEW WEEK'S BILLS

METROPOLITAN

"THE GOLD DIGGERS OF BROADWAY." Warner Bros. talking, singing and dancing picture entirely executed in Technicolor, adapted from Avery Hopwood's comedy, "The Gold Diggers," with Winnie Lightner, Conway Tearle, Nick Lucas and Nancy Welford featured, supported by Ann Pennington and star cast. Directed by Roy Del Ruth. Reviewed Saturday night.

By NELSON B. BELL.

To my notion this frothy bit of hilarity is the best entertainment that has been released since the inception of the conversational celluloids. I am still willing to record this opinion after having seen the film three times. Not the greatest picture, mind you, nor one that is without its obvious defects, but the best entertainment for those who enjoy having the eye dazzled, the risibilities tickled and the ear soothed.

The basis of the plot is Avery Hopwood's pungent farce originally produced by David Belasco as a starring vehicle for Ina Claire and in its day as racy a tidbit as the theater could offer. Upon this substantial foundation has been reared a superstructure of comedy, song, spectacle and dance that discloses such a gatling-gun succession of convulsing incidents, provocative musical numbers of terpsichorean hurricanes that the spectator is left dizzy, but delighted.

By reason of the fact that the entire production has been filmed in natural color its every scene is a gem of delicately tinted beauty, with the shower of toy balloons that descends upon Ann Pennington's dance on a banquet table and the intervals of the stage revue in which the "gold diggers" earn their daily bread—but not the cake—perhaps ranking first in kaleidoscopic splendor.

The thread of narrative, you will recall, ties together the amusing episodes that puntuated the love of a youthful nephew of a rich uncle for a chorus girl, the ruse that was adopted to throw uncle off the track and that worthy's eventual surrender to the charms of the one he had first deemed the most dangerous of the sirens.

William Bakewell and Helen Foster are the adolescent lovers; Conway Tearle, the uncle; Nancy Welford, the chief schemer; Albert Gran, Uncle Steve's attorney, who goes overboard for Mabel, wildest of all these wild women; Winnie Lightner, Mabel; Lilyan Tashman, Ann Pennington, Gertrude Short, Nick Lucas and Neely Edwards, the more important of the troupers, and Julia Swayne Gordon, Armand Kaliz and Lee Moran, foremost of those on the sidelines.

To attempt any minute appraisal of the acting of Mr. Tearle in the most serious role in the play; the comedy of Miss Lightner and Mr. Gran; the acting, singing and dancing of Miss Welford; the youthful charm of Mr. Bakewell and Miss Foster; the tuneful ballading of Mr. Lucas; the syncopated rhythms of Miss Pennington; the bored ennui of the Misses Tashman and Short; the harassed stage managing of Mr. Edwards, or any of the rest of it, would be to undertake a silly and wholly bootless work of supererogation. Enough that you will die at Winnie Lightner, try to whistle everything Nick Lucas sings—and possibly succeed with "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" and "Painting the Clouds With Sunshine"—and leave the theater convinced that the same evening's diversion would cost you $5.50 on the stage and be a bargain.

I doubt if you will even notice that orchestras play where there are no orchestras, that some of Nick Lucas' singing is dragged in by the heels or that no effort has been made to achieve what is now known as "sound perspective." This is the first picture I have ever seen in which such faults have not come right up and smacked me between the eyes. I had to see it twice before I was conscious of their presence.

Owing to the full ten-reel length of the feature, the silent and sound newsreels are the only supplementaries.

LITTLE THEATER

"THE CONSTANT NYMPH." Silent drama from the story by Margaret Kennedy, starring Ivor Novello and Mabel Poulton. A Gainsborough production directed by Basil Dean. Reviewed Sunday night by J. F. Brady.

"The Constant Nymph" gives a new angle to our well-worn triangle themes for story plots. In this picture it seems unbelievable, however, that Lewis Dodd (Novello) could overlook so long the beautiful little miss, Tessa (Miss Poulton), who so lavishly showed her affection for him.

Here is a story of a girl hardly 14 (in the play) who loved at first sight this Lewis Dodd, who came to her father's home to study music. He, in turn, loved her cousin. This cousin, however, had ambitions to rise in the musical world and society and used the genius of her husband to achieve her ends. Throughout the picture we see the "constant" love of this "nymph," her runaway from the boarding school in which she was placed by the cousin, her childish capers at the society concert and then the serious, loving and tender feeling for Lewis at the moment of his success, when he directs an orchestra in his own compositions.

Miss Poulton gives a remarkable performance throughout. Ivor Novello rises at no time above the average. At times the photography could be better, but we are treated to interesting views in London, the Austrian Tyrol, Karindehutte and Brussels.

An unique film, "The Hollywood Extra," billed as having cost but $97 to make, is entertaining because of its oddity.

RIALTO

"THE DRAKE CASE." A Universal all-talking adaptation of a story by Charles Logue, featuring Forrest Stanley, Robert Frazer and the late Gladys Brockwell. Directed by Edward Laemmle. Reviewed Saturday night by W. A. Whitney.

"Things are seldom what they seem," wrote W. S. Gilbert years ago, and if you don't believe it, just go and see "The Drake Case," the late Gladys Brockwell's last starring vehicle, current at the Rialto!

Circumstantial evidence, ever the forte of writers of the mysterious, is here used probably as ingeniously as it has ever been. Arraigned on a charge of first-degree murder under circumstances ostensibly precluding the remotest possibility of her innocence, Lulu Marks is brought before the bar of justice. Her severe cross-examination and the able defense put up by Roger Lane in her behalf make up the greater portion of the picture, which includes several surprises that are not only totally unexpected, but which are new to celluloid dramas.

In the role of Lulu Marks, Gladys Brockwell does a fine piece of work that is strikingly reminiscent of "Madame X" and her own minor, though faultlessly acted, role in "The Argyle Case." Forrest Stanley is the district attorney, whose plea for a verdict of guilty is capably read. His interpretation is refreshing in view of the fact that his methods of cross-examination are entirely free from apparent fiendish delight which is generally associated with these parts. The part of Roger Lane, the defense attorney, is essayed by Robert Frazer, who admirably defends the woman who refuses steadfastly to reveal anything more than she is innocent, yet glad Mrs. Drake is dead.

James Crane, as Hugo Jepson, the Drake family legal adviser; Doris Lloyd, as Mrs. Drake; Barbara Leonard, as Georgia Drake, whose connection should not be now revealed; and Tom Dugan, as Bill Bond, whose appearance on the stand furnishes the comedy relief, are the principal supporting members of the cast. Among the others included are Bill Thorne, Eddie Hearn, Byron Douglas, Francis Ford, Henry Barrows, and Amber Norman. They are well chosen and interpret their respective roles without flaw.

The use of the flash-back concurrent with the courtroom testimony is effectively used. The pounding of the gavel to silence the audience is for the first time employed and done so very effectively. The one flaw of the picture can not be revealed at this time for, inasmuch as it deals with the interrelation of characters, the sudden and striking denouement would lose its effectiveness.

Supporting the feature are "Baby Talks," a Sunny Jim comedy wherein Sunny's antics are far too ingenious to go with his costume; "The Actor," or Benny Rubin "pinch-hitting" for half of every act in a vaudeville show, as an acrobat, cornetist, vocal soloist, and tap dancer; and a release of the Universal newsreel.

COLUMBIA

"THE DANCE OF LIFE." Paramount all-talking, singing and dancing screen version of the play "Burlesque," by George Manker Watters and Arthur Hopkins, with Nancy Carroll and Hal Skelly featured. Directed by John Cromwell and Edward Sutherland. Reviewed Saturday afternoon.

For a play dealing with a wing of the theater dedicated to frivolity, and one which never exalts itself above the whoopee side of Broadway, this picturization of an outstanding stage hit embodies an extraordinary amount of what, for want of a better name, is usually referred to as "heart interest."

Perhaps this effect is heightened by what I fear is a slight idealization of the rank and file of the troupers touring the "smoker circuits." However that may be, it is engendered by the conspicuous excellence of the performances offered by Hal Skelly, who here transplants his original stage creation of "Skid" Johnson from the boards to the articulate screen, and Nancy Carroll, whose portrayal of the intensely sympathetic role of Benny King must at least approximate Barbara Stanwyck's, which I have never seen.

The grip of the basic drama unfolded with all its wealth of embellishment is all the more remarkable by reason of that very embellishment and the thoroughly legitimate manner of its introduction. The songs, the dances, the dressing-room shots and finally the gorgeous "Follies" scene, executed in Technicolor, all have their proper places in the development of the simple, direct and forceful theme of steadfast and undying love that is the story's raison d'etre, and so become valuable dramatic assets rather than more extraneous distractions.

The spectacle of "Skid's" conquest of Broadway as star of one of Mr. Ziegfeld's more pretentious glorifications is gorgeousness itself, but I dare say that each successive audience at the Columbia will number more than a few who will find the burlesque scenes productive of the bigger "kick." "Burlesque" in these sequences is burlesque, despite the fact that its name has been changed to "The Dance of Life." May Boley, a former luminary of musical comedy, as the blonde Amazon leading the chorus numbers; Al St. John, her "second comic" husband, and all the rest lending their gifts to the representation of a form of entertainment that has passed the point of its highest glory, would tackle the heart of "Beef Trust" Billy Watson himself.

But when all is said and done, it is the finely conceived character of "Skid" and the tremendously moving impersonation of Bonny, to which Mr. Skelly and Miss Carroll bring qualities that are splendidly human and believable, that will cause this picture to be remembered as one of the best of the year.

Among the many others in the cast who contribute notably to the conviction of one of the best of the backstage stories caught by the cameras and microphones to date, must be mentioned Ralph Theodore, as Bonny's ardent first-row admirer; Charles Brown, the burlesque impresario, and Dorothy Revier, chief menace to Bonny's happiness. Direction and recording reveal no apparent flaw.

The supporting program is comprised of a short Cliff Edwards Metro-Movietone act, done in blackface; the M-G-M and Movietone newsreels and a brief orchestra prelude. N. B. B.

PALACE

"JEALOUSY." Paramount talking picture, from the play by Louis Verneuil. Produced by Monta Bell and directed by Jean de Limur. Starring Jeanne Eagels, with Fredric March. Reviewed Sunday afternoon by C. Ransom.

There is nothing about the personality of Jeanne Eagels to suggest that her special task in the talkies is to instill humanity into deceptive and treacherous women. Sadie Thompson in "Rain," through whom she made her way to fame, was neither of these things. Probably it is merely a case of some one deciding, since she made so attractive and competent a lying wife in "The Letter" that she would be just the one to undertake the still more subtly mendacious French heroine of "Jealousy." It takes more than twice to make a habit, so here is a wish that the next time she may be found at least truthful, if not otherwise virtuous.

No one will question her continuing triumph. With her crisp and flexible speech, adroitly tuned to nature at every turn of expression, her warmth of feeling and her easy rise to emotional chances, she holds her assured place as one of the most capable screen players of the talking age. In the tragedy of the unmoral young woman who vainly seeks happiness through pretense, she earns for Yvonne as much sympathy as the rather repellent character will allow.

Fredric March plays well up to her lead as the young lover and husband who too innocently accepts Yvonne's assumption of virtue and falls victim to his own credulity and conscience. It is a strange twist of thought that would regard jealousy as the theme of the tale and the key to the young man's downfall. It is only in his just jealousy that he first betrays gleams of intelligence. Masculine stupidity victimized by feminine deceit is what the play is about.

The third corner of the triangle, the elegant, elderly Frenchman of the world who finances Yvonne's early career, as well as her love, her wedding, and her married life, is admirably played by Robert Bonneville, who will excuse it, please, if there is any error in his unadvertised name. The character of the suave and perfectly poised philanderer, so necessary to films of Parisian background, has seldom been more adequately depicted.

The few minor players are well chosen and all the fittings and settings are the acme of elegance, finely photographed. The early scenes are laid in a fashionable Parisian dressmaking establishment and the display of models and gowns is doubtless, for the feminine taste, the cream of the entertainment.

On the stage Al Evans manfully and gracefully names all the entertainers and conducts the orchestra in a decorative version of "St. Louis Blues." Miss Sylvia Field displays a charming soprano in one operatic and one popular number. The Hickey brothers are dancing comedians who toil with a will and have some funny stuff. Eileen and Marjorie are tumblers who use their heads several ways, and Marjorie is remarkable for her resemblance in shape and behavior to a well-trained rubber ball. Kay and Sayres do some stepping and are assisted by a case of Scotch. The Gamby-Hall girls do the usual ornamental array. Also news pictures are shown.

FOX

"SALUTE." Fox all-talking picture from a story by Tristram Tupper and John Stone, featuring George O'Brien, Helen Chandler, William Janney and Stepin Fetchit. Directed by John Ford. Reviewed Sunday afternoon.

There is enough of the spirit of the Army and the Navy in this subject to win a couple of wars. Based on the clash of brothers, one a husky athlete enrolled at West Point, the other a weakling in physical comparison, enlisted as a midshipman at Annapolis, it never seriously lets down from the high suggestion of brass buttons, waving flags and the distant echoes of "Anchors Aweigh."

If the picture has a weakness it is of story rather than any deficiency in acting, direction, photography or recording. Even so, the trite idea of the more puny of the rival brothers winning the Army-Navy game against his giant kinsman, in the last quarter of play, is effectively masked by a wealth of comedy, a degree of love interest and the obvious authenticity of the Naval Academy and football scenes. Of course, the game is a fake, but the crowd is real.

George O'Brien and William Janney are excellently cast as the contrasting brothers—the one taking what he wants when he wants it; the other, suffering from an inferiority complex and a girl fixation. When Cadet Randall seemed to have stolen Midshipman Randall's girl, that was just enough to make the middle a better football player than his landlubber brother. The object of this keen rivalry is personified by Helen Chandler, whose portrayal is an odd but highly efficient combination of demureness and sophistication. Her philosophy of life is well beyond her years. No such quality impedes the fast work of Marian Wilson, a quaint little heart-breaker, played with a delightful drawl by Joyce Compton.

Perhaps Stepin Fetchit's role of "Smoke Screen" would have been "fatter" had he not seen fit to spend several days in Washington A. W. O. L. during the filming of the picture at Annapolis, but as it is he appears infrequently. When on the scene he is, as usual, irresistibly funny. First comedy honors, however, I should unhesitatingly bestow upon Frank Albertson, cast as the fresh middie from Paducah, who is unfailingly vocal, cocky and amusing. And for a fine reflection of the Navy spirit of honor and fair play, Rex Bell is to be commended in the role of the leader of the hazers. Others of note in the cast include Clifford Dempsey, Lumsden Hare and David Butler.

The football game is thrilling and with its real Army-Navy background occasioned numerous outbursts of applause yesterday afternoon, as, indeed, did many of the other sequences in which the entire student body of the Naval Academy participated.

The stage portion of the entertainment is furnished by the second of the Panchon and Marco units, "Fantasma" by name. Not so elaborate as the first from the same source, this revue, nevertheless, is spirited and colorful and won unstinted applause from the capacity house at the performance I attended yesterday. Dewey Barto and George Mann, eccentric acrobatic comics, recently of Earl Carroll's "Vanities," wowed the customers, as did also Vivian Faye, dancer from "Good News" and Red Corcoran, a ribald young man with a banjo and some trick songs. Others in the running include Frank Warde, creator of a doll novelty that features the "Wedding of the Painted Doll" finale; Matt Gibbons, acrobatic dancer; Elaine Drummond, soprano; Dan Carroll, barytone; the Sunkist Beauties and John Irving Fisher, master of ceremonies.

The Fox Movietone News and Victor Herbert's "American Fantasie," the overture rendered under the baton of Leon Brusiloff, complete a bill that is a credit to the theater's second anniversary. N. B. B.

EARLE

"THE LADY LIES." Paramount all-talking picture from the stage play by John Meehan, costarring Walter Huston and Claudette Colbert. Directed by Hobart Henley. Reviewed Saturday night by Mary Porter Russell.

There is something essentially unmovielike about this stage play adaptation, with its stage stars and stage freedom of subject matter. We have long been accustomed to witnessing the lives of those who have violated the conventions presented behind the footlights in a sympathetic and sometimes alluring light, but the screen has consistently meted out suffering to the deserters of the narrow path and happiness to its followers. Now appears "The Lady Lies," and one more cinematic tradition is relegated to the things that are silent and forgotten.

The film is unquestionably entertaining. Regardless of any other reactions that may come to you, you will be interested and you will laugh. A widower, with a young son and daughter, maintains as a "separate element" a girl whom he has not chosen to make his wife. This exemplary arrangement is perfect for all concerned until Uncle
